

WHO WOULD YOU TRUST TO TELL YOUR STORY?

Who would you trust to tell your story?

That was the question that Cleveland activist Johanna Orozco-Fraser and journalist Rachel Dissell had to contemplate when playwright and director Tlaloc Rivas contacted them. His first email, sent on New Year's Day 2014, said in part:

Your story came to my attention years ago. As you know, [Johanna's] story is an inspiration to many Latinos and young women across the country.

I share your belief that stories and storytelling have the potential for social change. The plays I create aim to tell stories that provoke a conversation about important subjects between artists and audiences. I believe that Johanna's story has that potential.

As it happens, I will be traveling to Cleveland [soon]... I'd like to talk with you about whether a play inspired by your articles can happen.

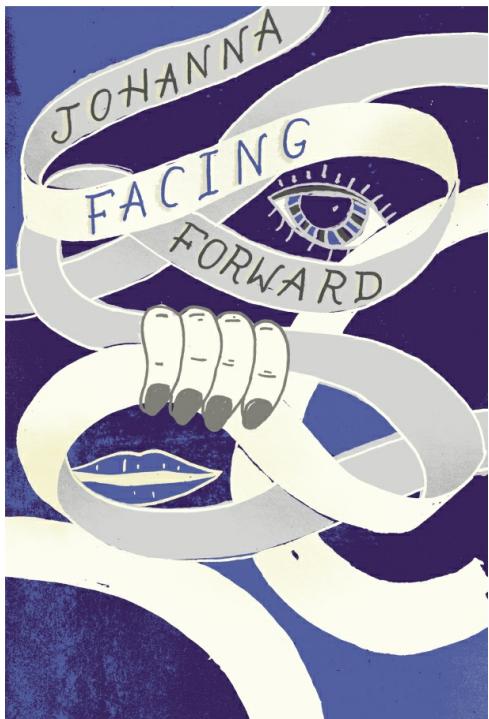

The three met just a couple of weeks later. Orozco-Fraser, who survived a near-fatal attack by her ex-boyfriend and became a leading advocate for change in Ohio's domestic violence laws, had become lasting friends with Dissell, a Plain Dealer reporter, as Rachel wrote a series of articles chronicling Johanna's recovery in 2007 (the complete 9-part series is available here). Both friends decided that Rivas deserved their trust. They gave their blessing to his effort to bring their story to the stage.

Just hours later, CPT Executive Artistic Director Raymond Bobgan offered the project a home at this theatre. As Rivas began to shape the script, Orozco-Fraser and Dissell became treasured advisors and collaborators on this new telling of the story.

Meet the Playwright and Director...

Tlaloc Rivas is a writer, director, and theatre-maker who creates, develops and directs new plays focusing on the complexity, diversity and history of Latina/os in the United States and abroad. He also directs bilingual plays, classical and contemporary pieces, and new work by some of America's most exciting writers.

Originally from Baja California, Mexico and raised in Northern California, Tlaloc graduated with honors from the University of California Santa Cruz, and received his MFA in Directing from the University of Washington's School of Drama. He splits his time between Iowa City (as Assistant Professor of Theatre at The University of Iowa) and Pittsburgh, where his wife Megan teaches at Carnegie Mellon University. He also enjoys running and hiking with his dog Xīñ½ñ½chitl.

Onda. As former Co-Chair of the LTC's National Steering Committee, he helped organize the largest gathering of Latina/o artists in 25 years at Emerson College, Boston. He is a member of ATHE's Latina/o Focus Group, a member of the National Association of Latino Arts and Cultures (NALAC) and an Associate Member of Stage Directors and Choreographers, the national union for stage directors and choreographers.

From the Dramaturg... (and what is a "dramaturg" anyway?)...

A dramaturg is a jack of all trades: a researcher, advocate, interface for the director, literary editor, consultant, a specialist. Dramaturgs work closely with playwrights and directors to inform choices and to dissect theatrical structure.

Megan Monaghan Rivas , Dramaturg of Johanna: Facing Forward , has been conducting extensive research on Johanna Orozoco's impact on legal reform. Johanna's advocacy helped pass two bills in the Ohio state legislature.

One made it possible for young people under 18 to get orders of protection against other young people under 18 - the "Teen Dating Violence Bill."

The other, "Tina's Law" or "The Tina Croucher Act," made it mandatory for Ohio public schools to teach a curriculum on domestic violence prevention. The law was named in memory of a teenage girl who was killed by her ex-boyfriend in a murder-suicide. Johanna lobbied for the law and after it was passed, she frequently spoke in schools and other venues to help train teachers, counselors and students.
