LOOKING AT THE PAST WITH THE ROGERS

Arriving at a time of rotary dial telephones, an exchange rate of 4 DM to the dollar, and when the tallest building in Frankfurt was the Henniger Tower, Carolyn and Don Rogers have seen many changes at what they have said is "the best assignment any teacher could have ever wanted."

Upon arriving from Okinawa, they had originally intended to stay for two years to complete their teaching contract. However, the years went by and they raised their daughter here. She became a student at Rhein/Main as well as Frankfurt American High School, and has since become a Learning Disabilities teacher in North Carolina. The Rogers are now ready to leave their favorite school, as they plan their retirement in the states. When they leave, they will be taking a large piece of the school's memories along with them.

The Rhein Main Junior High School (RMJHS) served 7th to 9th grades and had a student population of greater than 500 students for several years, many of whom rode in daily on thirty large blue Air Force busses. The building attached to the school, which now houses DSO offices, were part of the school. The "new school" was a welcome addition to the facility as it alleviated an overcrowded situation that forced primary school children to attend classes in the building across the autobahn at the picnic area. The 'new school' served the community well for 25 years, but the 'drawdown' resulted in reduction in size of the school and the partitioning of classrooms into DSO office space.

Field trips were common. Weekend trips to Holland, France, Alpine Germany, Austria, the Rhoen Mountains and the duty train to Berlin were routine. Day trips brought students to the Frankfurt Zoo, various hallenbads, outdoor education in southwestern Germany, evening theater in Frankfurt or Wiesbaden, or volksmarching in adjacent forests. The Rogers commented "This was not Fairfax County East, but rather a unique opportunity for students in a host nation environment to experience the quality and culture of Germany". They also maintain that one constant which has remained throughout the years is that this school has always placed the student first. "It is good for students" has been the driving principle since the first day they came and thankfully, it still is.

Mrs. Rogers teaches science, home economics and sponsors daily team meetings in her room. Mr. Rogers teaches history, geography and is Program Director for the AVID program.

We wish them an enjoyable retirement.
