Turnstone

SPRING 2015

Meet Mike Mushett

Turnstone's new leader is set to build upon the accomplishments of his predecessor.

Mike Mushett may have a tough act to follow, but his credentials make him the perfect person to lead Turnstone as the center continues to grow its adaptive sports and recreation programs and facilities. Mike has 30 years of experience in promoting adaptive sports and recreation, an area championed by former Chief Executive Officer Nancy Louraine.

Mike's familiarity with Turnstone and its current expansion in sports programs and facilities, his expertise in sports and recreation, and his body of work on behalf of people with disabilities put him on the short list of top candidates.

"I think my experience in sports and recreation was the overriding factor in my being given this opportunity at Turnstone," Mike says, "But another determining factor was that the focus of my career has been on improving the quality of life for people with disabilities in general."

Although Mike has his own style, he intends to build upon the legacy left by Nancy. "There's no doubt that Nancy left some big shoes to fill—she set the bar high," he says. "I'm not the second coming of Nancy Louraine, but I plan to build on all the great work she's done and continue to move Turnstone forward."

A native of Ohio, Mike earned a bachelor's degree in education at Xavier University in Cincinnati. His original goal was to teach and coach sports, but during a student-teaching stint at Indian Hill High School near Cincinnati, his first assignment was teaching kids with physical disabilities. That experience changed everything for Mike, and he immediately went back to earn a master's degree in recreational therapy at Central Michigan University. His first professional job was as director of an organization promoting sports and recreation for people with disabilities in Westland, Michigan.

But that was just the beginning; groundbreaking work was on the horizon. In 1992, Mike moved to Atlanta, where he worked for the 1996 Atlanta Paralympic Games. He served as chief operating officer for the games, which featured 3,000 athletes, from 102 countries participating in more than 20 sports. Subsequently, at Georgia State University in Atlanta in the late '90s, Mike helped design and implement one of the first intercollegiate wheelchair tennis programs in the United States. He later served as the vice president of programs for the United States Disabled Athletes Fund, now BlazeSports America, the legacy foundation for the 1996 Atlanta Paralympic Games.

Mike then served as director of the Paralympic Sport Outreach and Development program for the U.S. Olympic Committee from 2006 to 2013. Most recently, Mike was executive director of Wheelchair & Ambulatory Sports USA, a national nonprofit organization.

In addition to overseeing all of Turnstone's programs and leading fundraising, Mike is now charged with making the most of "The Turnstone of Tomorrow," a $15.5 campaign to meet the ever-growing need for sports and recreation opportunities and facilities. The 125,000-square-foot expansion—the cornerstone of which is a 75,000-square-foot field house—will enable Turnstone to grow its offerings in adaptive sports and recreation, aquatics, and health and wellness.

"Adaptive sports and recreation are essential components in the lives of people with disabilities of all ages," Mike says. "Everyone needs to participate, to be engaged in activities that promote fitness, independence, self-confidence, self-esteem, social interaction, and overall well-being. Adaptive sports and recreation promote all of that."

Another goal of "The Turnstone of Tomorrow" campaign is to make the center an attractive place to become an official U.S. Paralympic training site, the first one in Indiana. Turnstone already has a national reputation for its sports programs and teams, and being an official Paralympic training site would lead to even more recognition.

"Turnstone's being an official Paralympic training site would be of great benefit not just to our center, but to Fort Wayne and northeast Indiana, as well," Mike says. ❄️

"I'm not the second coming of Nancy Louraine, but I plan to build on all the great work she's done and continue to move Turnstone forward."

THE TURNSTONE OF TOMORROW UPDATE

Setting the standard

Despite winter blast, construction well under way on world-class facilities.

Turnstone is currently undergoing an expansion that will provide additional adults and children with access to fitness and sports-activities. This project is essential because when people with disabilities participate in these activities, their level of independence and overall well-being greatly improves. The "Turnstone of Tomorrow" is a 125,000-square-foot expansion that focuses on meeting the ever-growing need for opportunities in adaptive sports and recreation, aquatics, health and wellness, as well as an expansion of Adult Day Services. The cornerstone is a 75,000-square-foot field house. Project completion is expected in July 2015.

Adaptive sports and recreation complex

The fieldhouse will include a 230-meter indoor track, four collegiate-sized basketball courts, and mezzanine for seating and conference rooms. While these facilities are sports-centric, the entire community of people with disabilities can enjoy recreation and fitness in this facility.

Accessible Health and Wellness Center

Demand for health and wellness facilities designed for the unique needs of people with disabilities is growing rapidly. Turnstone's expansion will double the size of its existing Health and Wellness Center. Larger facilities will enable the agency to more specialized equipment and disability-specific programming such as group classes for stroke survivors, adaptive Pilates, and adaptive yoga.

Warm-water pool for aquatic therapy

The demand for warm-water therapy has exceeded the capacity of the existing pool, so Turnstone is building a larger warm-water pool equipped with a lift and zero-depth wheelchair ramp that will be used for pain management, exercise, and specialized aquatic programs for children and adults. This new pool will be large enough for Turnstone to offer group therapy sessions.

Turnstone is well on its way to becoming the nation's gold standard for empowering individuals with disabilities. As the center of a community of care, Turnstone will raise the stature of Fort Wayne, create a whole new market for visitors and tourists, and help spur economic growth throughout the region. Expanding the facilities to accommodate international growth in Paralympics and adaptive sports programs are essential to achieving these aspirations. 🌟
