DID YOU KNOW...

In a recent sermon, Rev. Heinzl read from a Bible translation different than the New Revised Standard Version (NSRV). How many translations are there? According to Cokesbury, their guide lists 19 popular Bible Translations. Other sources indicate around 50 different English versions for the Bible and others cite as many as 900 printed translations and paraphrases of the Bible.

*For the Lord gives wisdom;
from his mouth come knowledge
and understanding;*

~Proverbs 2:6

I know we still have about two weeks to go but I can't help but think about the beginning of Lent on Ash Wednesday. What got me started was an essay I read about "protest songs," ranging from Bob Dylan's Hurricane to Bob Marley's Redemption Song to more contemporary music. The essay ended with these words:

"Perhaps today's protest song is not one that changes people's minds but one that sustains people who have already been convinced: a song that aims not to take down the powerful but to lift up the weary—those who may be looking for a way to keep going when all seems lost."

These lines evoked in me the prophet Isaiah's Song of the Suffering Servant, as it is often called, in which God reminds the struggling prophet to "sustain the weary with a word (Is. 50:4)." This was a tall order for the ill-equipped prophet, who, himself tired, was charged to address the worn-out Israelites for whom all seemed lost after they had been violated and dragged into exile.

Words are fine and dandy, we may think, but being cheerleaders who jump up and down on the sidelines without ever getting into the real game is not going to get it done. I also don't think this is what God had in mind for the Suffering Servant—Isaiah or Israel—depending on how we read the text. God did not simply want a cheerleader but a champion. I say this because God's word is always creative, generative, and concrete. God's word is never just a word. When God speaks, things happen. Order emerges from chaos. Light is separated from darkness. Sun, moon, and stars appear. Creatures swim, fly, and crawl. People walk the earth. Mountains are brought low. Valleys are lifted. God, in Jesus Christ, lives among us.

God charged Isaiah with concrete action, not just with words because talk is cheap. If there are no real actions and changes resulting from our words, we might as well save our breath.

Bearing all this in mind, I want to invite us to think about the "word that helps sustain the weary" as our Lenten practice. A word that helps sustain us individually, helps sustain our church and our city. And then turn that word into a reality. Assembling 240 clean-up buckets and 480 hygiene kits last week was a really good start ...

Blessings,
