In mid-1964 the Ford Motor Company introduced a small, sporty car which caught the rest of the auto industry totally off guard and captured the hearts of the American car buying public. During 1966 the Mustang continued to sell like ‘hot cakes’ and became the third best selling individual nameplate in the American auto industry.

1966 was the first year of federally mandated safety standards and all 1966 Ford products included seat belts, padded dashes, and emergency flashers.
