

Charism Discernment for Diocesan Schools

Help every educator in your diocese grow in their Catholic identity, understand how they're being uniquely called to build the Church, and articulate their personal path to sainthood.

Who it's for

Faculty and staff throughout your school system, gathered for a diocesan in-service. Works in an auditorium or a gym; the small-group portion can work both at tables or in rows.

Why this formation is worth it

- Every person in your school system will come away with a new awareness of where they are at spiritually and what is unique about how they use their gifts in education.
- Superintendents, principals, and other administrators can tailor faith and professional support on an ongoing basis to the real needs and aptitudes of their educators.
- Every teacher's annual faith formation requirement is satisfied on one date with one event.
- Catholic identity is accredited largely on rubrics schools score themselves. This is one of the few things you can put in that accreditation file that comes from somewhere other than your own opinion of your own faculty.

Annual faith formation • accreditation evidence • at scale

Same fit as a single-school in-service, across every school at once. We'll provide an outline mapped to the Mission and Catholic Identity benchmarks so it's ready to file!

What the day covers

1. Identity comes first. We start with what we believe about ourselves, God, and the relationship between us. This then leads into a deeper conversation about how this identity impacts how we live service and mission in our lives, and why clarity in this area has to come first.
2. What a charism is. Then we'll get into the theology of grace, charisms, and how these gifts differ from talents and from the Gifts of the Spirit discussed in sacramental prep. Everything is grounded in Scripture, Vatican II, and the Catechism, with easy-to-understand framing.
3. The twenty-four charisms. A walk through each charism on our list — both hallmarks of the gift and what it looks like in daily life.
4. What happens next. We end by breaking open how discernment works, starting with a most-likely list, not a definitive answer. We'll explain how to create test scenarios, the steps of the process, how long to take, and what commitment means.

What the full day adds

- Time to reflect on identity. A guided worksheet and time to pray before charisms are introduced, so people have processed where they are at personally in this aspect of their spiritual development.
- "Is this you?" for all twenty-four charisms. Three discernment questions per charism — the things we always ask when we have someone in front of us discerning a certain charism. These questions are often very clarifying and have people smiling knowingly across the table at each other.

- Charism assessment time built in. Everyone takes the assessment in the room on a personal device, with the presenter there to answer questions while they do.
- Small-group discussion. Thirty to forty-five minutes of feedback from peers about what gifts they see in each other. At many events, this is what really changes things for people.
- All three stages of identity. The full walkthrough — the work, the struggles, the virtues, and what discernment looks like at each stage. This foundational information is key to approaching discernment well, but it's too in-depth to make time for in the half-day workshop.
- A finished plan. Discernment worksheet time built in, so everyone leaves with a plan to move into commitment.

Format and cost

Recommended for this room: full day. Full day. We never like to give teachers homework, so giving them time to complete everything in person, including the assessment and a follow-up plan, is very helpful.

WHAT	COST
Half day — roughly three hours	$1,500
Full day	$1,800
Travel	at cost
Charism assessment, per person	$6.99

Assessments are billed after the day for the people who actually took one. No estimate of attendance, no block purchased in advance. If your group has already taken the assessment, that line is zero.

What people leave with

Their own results, a most-likely list of three or four charisms to test, and a plan for finishing discernment — so the day has somewhere to go.

A charism assessment is a starting point rather than a verdict — it names what someone most likely carries, and using it is how they find out.
