1 Briefly describe the organization's mission

Founded in 1987, the Institute for American Values, (hereinafter the Institute) is a private, nonpartisan organization whose mission is to study and strengthen civil society. In 2016, to address the current crisis of American public life, The Institute has embraced a new primary activity and created a new name for that initiative. The name is Better Angels and the activity is the reduction of social polarization the process of society separating into mutually antagonistic groups that increasingly do not trust or understand one another. Polarization is a main reason why U S public life is so often dysfunctional, and is an important threat to the vitality of U S civil society. Better Angels is a bipartisan network of scholars and leaders whose goals are to bring people together from across the divides to rethink currently polarized issues, show why reducing polarization is an important priority, and study and recommend policy and institutional reforms that will permit progress and comp
