When your team losses five starters from a year ago, including your No. 1 singles and doubles players, the picture might not be too bright for 15th-year head coach Lou Belken. However, this year's newer faster product will have one senior, four sophomores and six freshmen which may contain a few surprises that opponents should not over look.

"This is the first time in my coaching career we have had 11 players all of whom can play in the top six at any time," says Belken.

"Where we will be stronger is in our depth and at the lower positions." In terms of doubles play, the Sun Devils will be inexperienced because very few players come into the college ranks as outstanding doubles players. So like a jigsaw puzzle, the task in the beginning of the season with such a new team will be to try and find the right combinations.

For most teams in the Pacific-10 Conference, playing at the No. 1 singles slot takes experience as well as a formidable game because of such a high competition level. Sergio Elias, the lone senior on the Sun Devils, will take on that role. Last season Elias posted an 18-13 singles record mainly at the No. 2 position. Elias has an explosive game, and is capable of beating anybody in the Pac-10. Early in the Fall, Elias had some nagging shoulder problems that limited his playing time, but has since bounced back to nearly full strength. "Elias is what collegiate tennis should be all about, meaning that he came in and initially started low in the lineup and worked on his game to make himself a really good player," says Belken. In addition to his work ethic, Elias has great ground strokes that keeps his competition constantly on the move and will look to wear down his opponent.

Freshman Alex Osterrieth had a great Fall in the upper half of the lineup and will continue to play there through the rest of the year. Osterrieth, a native of England, comes to ASU as one of the top two players in his country. Ranked 36th in the ITF junior world rankings, Osterrieth's international experience, which includes being a finalist at the Malaysian ITF tournament, as well as having played at the Wimbledon and French Opens, will be of great value in such a competitive conference. "He is very rough at making people play and making people beat him," says Belken. "Mechanically, he is sound and with a little more offense added into his attitude, Alex will be one of the top players in the conference."

Expect Osterrieth to stay around the top of the order in singles and doubles.

Sophomore Gustavo Marcaccio transferred to ASU in the Spring from the University of Mobile in Alabama. They posted a 27-1 singles record on the way to being runner-ups in the 1996 NAA national championship. Along with his extreme quickness, Marcaccio's ground strokes are very heavy with a lot of top spin, which will be a key element in his overall game. "Gustavo has a tremendous flair, he's very fast and flashy," says Belken. "He's extremely gifted and I hope we can take advantage of that." Marcaccio will stay in the top half in singles and will also contribute in doubles.

Also joining the ASU program in the Spring is freshman Amir Ran, who will look to see immediate action in the middle of the single's lineup. Ran is an intelligent player who will use his speed to his advantage against stiffer opponents. Besides the usual adjustment period of not competing in the Fall, Ran's initial matches have shown signs that he will be able to compete with some of the better competition the Sun Devils will face.

One of the more experienced doubles players on the team is sophomore Casey Was. "He understands the system well and is able to execute it," says Belken. Was, a local player from Horizon High School, is an intense player who will be looked upon for leadership.

Sophomore Tim Hammond, a native of Australia, basically recruited himself to play at Arizona State. Hammond transferred from Oklahoma City University, where he was ranked 44th in the nation. Additionally, Hammond played with fellow native Mark Philippoussis to win the Australian national doubles championships. Hammond has played well in the middle of the order this Fall and with a little more seasoning will be one to watch.

The most improved player over the Fall season has been the play of freshman Ed Carter. "He's a big athlete who has an explosive game," says Belken. Carter brings an impressive High School record with him, posting a 140-10 singles mark in four years at the Columbus Academy in Columbus, Ohio. Carter possesses a big serve and, coupled with his speed, makes his game one of the best on the team. Carter's motivation on the court is also evident in the classroom, where he is enrolled in the Honors College.

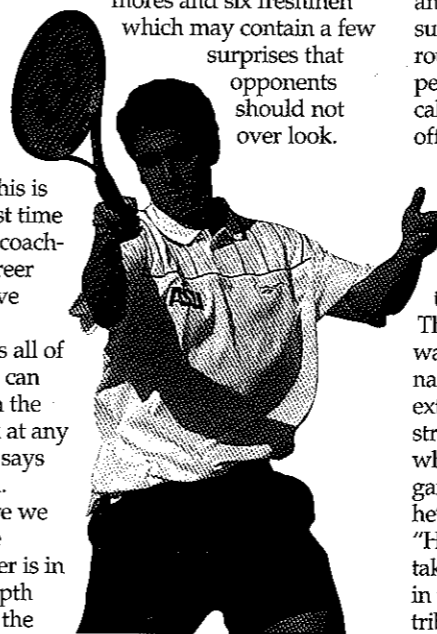

Freshman twin brothers Carey and Chris Biorkman are local players from Scottsdale who will see action at the No. 5 and 6 positions as well as in some doubles. In high school they were ranked No. 2 in the Southwest section in doubles. Both have great height at 6'4" and have long arms, which can frustrate their opponents by making them generate pinpoint shots. With more competition and some fine tuning, the Biorkman's game can only get better.

Freshman Miles Rogers has made a big jump since the Fall by implementing a more offensive game. Rogers was primarily a counter puncher, but has since expanded on his forehand to open up his game. A talented player from Canada, Rogers' quick development has him battling for starting time in the lineup.

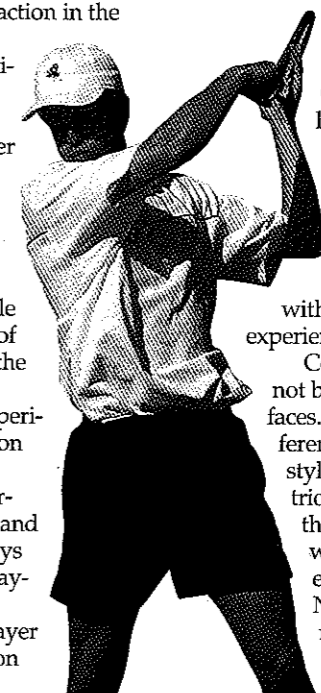

Due to an off-season injury, sophomore Hiroshi Nagashima will be redshirted for the 1996-97 season. Nagashima posted a 13-9 record last year at the No. 5 slot and with such a young team, Nagashima's experience in the lineup will be missed.

Coming up with a doubles lineup has not been an easy task with so many new faces. In the Fall, Belken tried several different combinations of speed, serving style and experience until settling on a trio of tandems. Elias and Carter, with their great ground strokes and serves, will play at the No. 1 spot. Experience will be the main factor at the No. 2 position with Was and Hammond. Combined at the No. 3 slot will be the power of Osterrieth coupled with the speed of Marcaccio.

The Sun Devil schedule features the always vigorous slate of Pac-10 Conference games along with out of conference matchups with Northern Arizona, Baylor, SMU, San Diego State, Virginia Tech and Michigan.

ASU Head Coach Lou Belken

Meet the Devils

Lou Belken enters his 15th season as head coach of the Arizona State men's tennis program, one which has been known over the years for its prowess on the national level. Belken has guided the Sun Devils to NCAA Tournament berths in five of the last nine years.

The 1996 season had its ups and downs, however, Belken's squad made it to the NCAA regional final coming up short against top-seeded Pepperdine. The always competitive Pac-10 Conference is bolstered by three teams in the top-10, including top-ranked UCLA, No. 2 Stanford and No. 7 USC.

1995 was a banner year for Arizona State tennis as Sargis Sargsian gave Arizona State not only its first No. 1 ranked player in the country, but its first NCAA champion as well. Sargsian also became the first player in NCAA history to win four ITA Grand Slam crowns. He was showered with acclaim, including Player of the Year and all-America honors. As a team, the Sun Devils made it to the round of sixteen in the NCAA tournament before being eliminated by Georgia. ASU defeated Colorado and Indiana State in regional action to reach that point.

Over the years, Belken has steadily built the Arizona State program, guiding it to its finest season in 1991. The Sun Devils finished No. 8 in the country and advanced to the quarterfinals of the NCAA tournament, posting an overall record of 21-10.

Brian Gyetko and Dave Lomicky garnered all-America acclaim in doubles while Gyetko also earned all-America status in singles. It was the second year in a row the duo had accomplished that feat. Gyetko went on to represent Canada at the 1992 Summer Olympics in Barcelona.

Four of Belken's pupils won national titles in 1990. Dave Lomicky was the first, winning the National Amateur Indoor singles championship, followed by doubles partner Bryan Gyetko, who captured the Canadian National men's singles championship. Ross Matheson then won the singles and doubles titles at the Scottish National Championships and Joel Finnigan concluded the run with a singles title at the U.S. Amateur.

Belken also guided his squad to the NCAA championships in 1988, its first trip since the dual match format was introduced. Belken's Sun Devils posted an 18-10 mark and were ranked among the nation's top-10 for the first time in a decade, eventually finishing the campaign ranked 11th. Among those 18 victories was a 5-4 triumph over top-ranked Southern California. It was ASU's first win over the Trojans since 1979 and the initial conquest of USC for Belken. That same year, Doug Sachs became Belken's initial all-America selection by downing two of the top three ranked singles players in the Intercollegiate Tennis Coaches Association (ITCA) rankings.

Belken, 44, took over the Sun Devil program in August of 1982 after a nine-year stint as head professional at Scottsdale (Ariz.) Racquet Club. Belken took that position in 1973 with no nationally-ranked players in the club, and within several years had developed two Wimbledon final eight participants, two national champions and numerous nationally-ranked juniors.

Former ASU star Gary Donnelly and two-time all-America Jim Grabb were Belken's top students at the club. Both have been ranked among the top-40 in the Association of Tennis Professionals (ATP) singles rankings and top-10 in doubles.

Donnelly has been a doubles finalist at Wimbledon, the U.S. Open and French Open. His best singles effort was an appearance in the round of 16 at the 1985 U.S. Open.

Grabb won the 1992 U.S. Open doubles title with Richey Reneberg and won the 1990 French Open doubles title with Patrick McEnroe. Grabb has been ranked No. 1 in the world in ATP doubles and among the top-30 in singles. Grabb has also posted singles wins over Stefan Edberg, Ivan Lendl, Andre Agassi, Michael Chang, Brad Gilbert, Andres Gomez and Mats Wilander.

Belken's first Arizona State team in 1982 posted an 8-19 overall record, but within three years, the Sun Devils made their first seasonal appearance in the nation's top-20.

Belken is a member of the ITCA and United States Professional Tennis Association (USPTA).

A native of Rockford, Ill., Belken graduated from Carroll College in Waukesha, Wis., in 1972 with a bachelor's degree in business administration. He graduated from Guilford High School in 1968.

Belken and his wife, Toni, have three children, Frederick, Cori and Matt.

Assistant Coach Laurie Warder

When someone comes to your program with credentials like first year assistant coach Laurie Warder, you realize your program will only benefit.

Warder, a native of Sydney, Australia, comes to Arizona State from the Association of Tennis Professionals Tour (ATP), where he was one of the most consistent doubles players on the circuit.

Warder's wealth of experience on the ATP Tour covers a span of nine years from 1984-1993, where he captured 12 doubles titles, including the 1993 Australian Open. In 1987, Warder reached a career-high six finals, winning a lone title at Indianapolis.

In addition to the Australian Open title, Warder reached the doubles quarterfinals at the French Open (1991) and Wimbledon (1989). In 1991 he finished ranked No. 12, as well as qualifying for the year-end ATP Tour World Doubles Championship.

* Pac-10 South Match
Blue/Grey Match, Birmingham Ala.

Men's tennis started as a club sport in 1902, making it the third-oldest sport to be played on ASU's campus, following only baseball (1891) and football (1896)

From 1903 to 1931, men's tennis was undergoing a metamorphosis from a club sport to an intercollegiate sport, as seen in 1913 when there was competition in both. In that year, the Tempe Normal team lost a dual match to the University of Arizona while the interclass senior team won the cup for the third year in a row.

In 1932, Arizona State Teachers College (ASTC) became part of the Border Conference and hired its first full-time coach, Earle Pomeroy. Pomeroy led the Bulldogs to a 7-3-1 record the following year, the first winning tennis season in ASU history.

Sketchy or nonexistent records typify Arizona State's experience in the Border Conference. However, coaches Pomeroy and Marlowe Keith, who boasts the longest tenure as head tennis coach (11 years), each posted back-to-back fourth-place finishes, Pomeroy in 1941 and '42 and Keith in 1957 and '58.

Charles Roach (1951-52), Fred Hickernell (1951-53) and Bob Gilbert (1952-54) were stalwarts in the Sun Devil lineup during the Border Conference days.

In 1963, Arizona State moved to the Western Athletic Conference under the guidance of coach Ted Bredehoff, who also coached wrestling at Arizona State from 1962-71.

Among numerous others, former Sun Devil all-Americas John Fort (1971) and Mark Joffey (1975) helped ASU accumulate a 253-107-1 (.700) record in the WAC.

ASU was represented by four singles players and two doubles teams at four NCAA Championships in a row (1973-76). At the 1978 NAAs, ASU downed Oklahoma State 6-3 to advance to the quarterfinals before being ousted by eventual champion Stanford.

From 1973 to 1979, Marty Pincus coached the men's tennis team to three first-place finishes in the WAC (1975, '76, '78). In 1976, the Sun Devils posted their best NCAA finish ever — fifth.

During the Pincus era, ASU compiled a 161-31 (.839) record, giving him the second-highest winning percentage among coaches of NCAA-sanctioned sports at ASU. He trails only former football coach Dan Devine who had a percentage of .887.

In 1979, ASU's men's tennis program entered the Pacific-10 Southern Division, the most competitive conference in the country. Since 1946, when the first Division I team champion was crowned, Pac-10 Southern Division teams have captured 40 of the 48 national titles.

Also in 1979, ASU produced its third all-America, Alan Waldman. He led his Sun Devil teammates to a 17th-place finish at the NAAs that year.

As ASU men's tennis entered the 1980s, Myron McNamara was named head coach and Gary Donnelly was just beginning his ASU tennis career. Donnelly, who played under the watchful eye of ASU's current head coach Lou Belken at Scottsdale Racquet Club, went on to achieve fame as a doubles finalist at Wimbledon in 1986. He also competed in the doubles semifinals at the 1985 U.S. Open and the 1987 French Open. Donnelly also competes in singles play. His singles career has been highlighted by his appearance in the round of 16 at the 1985 U.S. Open.

Lou Belken was named head tennis coach in 1983. He is the second-winningest coach in Sun Devil annals with 144 victories. In 1988, Belken's Devils, led by Doug Sachs, posted an 18-9 record, a fourth-place finish in the conference (ASU's best ever), and an 11th-place finish at the NAAs. ASU was ranked 11th in the nation and Sachs earned all-America accolades.

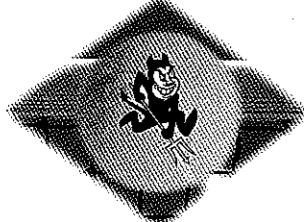

Dave Lomicky and Joel Finnigan won the 1989 U.S. Amateur doubles championship, while future Sun Devil Chris Gambino reached the semifinals in singles action.

In 1990, ASU had four national champions: Finnigan, Lomicky, Brian Gyetko and Ross Matheson. Finnigan captured the U.S. Amateur singles crown, while Lomicky won the 1990 National Amateur Indoor singles championship. Gyetko was crowned the Canadian National singles champion and Matheson earned the Scottish National singles and doubles titles.

In 1991, Belken led the Sun Devils to their best season ever during his reign, compiling a 21-10 record, and a quarterfinal berth at the NAAs. Brian Gyetko, who in 1990 became the first ASU tennis player to earn all-America acclaim in singles and doubles in the same year, duplicated the feat in 1991. Gyetko reached the quarterfinals of singles action at the NAAs (the farthest advancement by an ASU player since Mark Joffey in 1975) and the round of 16 in doubles with Lomicky.

Arizona State earned NCAA Tournament berths in 1988, '90 and '91. Also, since 1983, the Sun Devils' final postseason ranking has been higher than the preseason ranking every year but four.

In 1995, Sargis Sargsian became the first Sun Devil to win the NCAA Tournament, defeating USC's Brett Hansen in the finals 3-6, 6-3, 6-4. It was Sargsian's fourth collegiate Grand Slam title, which is more than any other player in collegiate tennis history. He finished the year as the NCAA Player of the Year, an all-America and the top-ranked player in the country.

Arizona State University

Arizona State University is an indispensable element of the Greater Phoenix community, matching university talents and expertise with the vision of community leaders to address issues of importance to the quality of life in the Valley of the Sun.

As a major research university serving metropolitan Phoenix, ASU accepts the responsibility of offering all the benefits that a diverse, rapidly growing population center expects from higher education: highest quality teaching and research, readily accessible continuing education and major contributions to the overall quality of life in the community and the region.

The University has three anchor campuses and an extended campus in the Greater Phoenix area. The extended campus brings university services into the community from a variety of locations as well as through flexible programs, schedules and technologies.

ASU MAIN, the original campus founded in Tempe in 1885, enrolls approximately 40,000 undergraduate and graduate students from all 50 states and more than 100 countries. ASU Main offers 87 bachelor's degree programs, 97 master's degree programs, 53 doctoral programs and one law degree program.

ASU WEST, established in northwest Phoenix in 1984, serves approximately 5,000 upper division and graduate students, predominantly from the Phoenix area, and offers 23 bachelor's degree and four master's degree programs.

ASU EAST, the university's newest anchor campus, was established in 1995 at the former Williams Air Force Base in Mesa. ASU East will be the home campus for ASU's Schools of Technology and Agribusiness when it opens its doors in the fall of 1996 to approximately 1,000 students.

Undergraduate education provides the foundation for everything Arizona State University does, and the faculty and staff intend that foundation to be among the best of any public university in the nation. ASU West offers research-based degree programs to upper division students in small classroom environments; ASU East offers small classroom settings for a selection of both upper and lower division classes.

ASU Main combines the wealth of program options and resources of a major university with the supportive environments of smaller communities within the larger university. The Freshman Year Experience program focuses academic support and other campus resources directly to the students in a residence hall community designed especially for freshman. The Campus Communities program brings together students from a variety of backgrounds, academic interests and intended careers and provides them with opportunities to apply classroom learning to real world issues in specific areas of common interest.

Over the past five years, so many ASU students have been selected for prestigious national scholarships and awards that the university is one of the leading U.S. public institutions in the number of national scholarship awards based on academic excellence as well as public service. ASU students have won 10 Truman Scholarships, two Marshall Scholarships (ASU students also won in 1986 and 1991) and one Rhodes Scholarship, which is the foremost academic scholarship in the world (ASU also has had three finalist since 1991). Additionally, ASU students have received eight Fulbright Fellowships and 10 National Security Education Program Grants. Four ASU students have been named to USA Today's All-USA Academic First Team in the past five years.

Classification as Research University I by the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching certifies ASU's place in the front rank of the nation's major research universities, and the quality of the university's instructional programs attracts outstanding students from across the United States and around the world.

While the growth of research at ASU is one of the most rapid in the country, research is not a separate enterprise but a fundamental component of the university as a whole. Research is integral not only to the traditional search for new knowledge but to the full spectrum of scholarship, having a direct and measurable impact on the quality of undergraduate education. At ASU research embraces a wide variety of creative endeavors, actively nurturing collaboration among faculty members across the university; it supports community partnerships and economic development efforts; and strengthens and invigorates teaching throughout the university.

ASU's graduate programs in journalism, education and business are ranked in the top 50 in the nation by U.S. News and World Report in its 1996 listing of "America's Best Graduate Schools." Two programs in the Walter Cronkite School of Journalism and Telecommunications were cited by the magazine. The graduate program in radio and television ranked seventh and print journalism was 14th. The master of business administration in the College of Business ranked 34th among the nation's 292 accredited MBA programs, up from 44th last year. The College of Education's graduate program rated 29th of 191 programs that grant doctoral degrees, up from 47th last year.

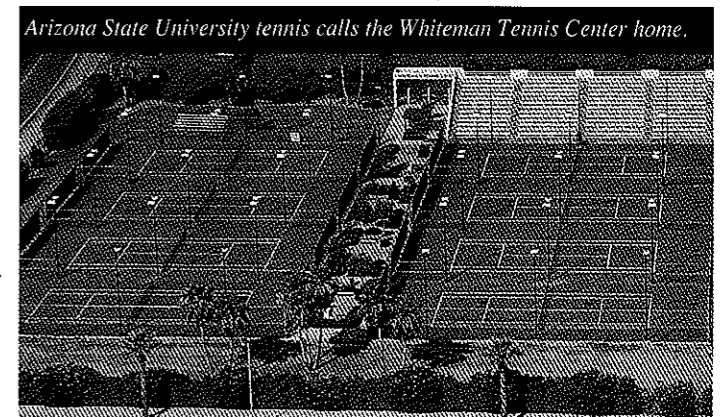

Arizona State University actively seeks partnerships within the community that promote economic development, address metropolitan issues such as quality of life, provide linkages with K-12 education, and develop innovative approaches to solving problems of concern to both.

The University also provides Greater Phoenix and the State of Arizona with some of the finest performing and fine arts venues in the world. Gammage Auditorium on ASU's main campus, a Frank Lloyd Wright-designed landmark center for the performing arts, seats approximately 3,000 and regularly attracts the nation's finest performers and productions to the Valley of the Sun.

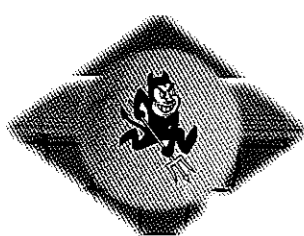

The Sundome Center for the Performing Arts in Sun City West is America's largest single-level theater with more than 7,000 seats. ASU's Kerr Cultural Center in Scottsdale offers smaller-venue cultural events.

The television station at ASU Main, KAET, Channel 8, is an award-winning Public Broadcasting Service (PBS) affiliate, operated by ASU and broadcasting 24 hours daily.

Arizona State University is positioning itself as the model for the university of the next century by expanding areas of community involvement, developing innovative undergraduate education and by strengthening its world class research portfolio. For ASU, the future has never been brighter.

ASU Academic Staff

Arizona State University's approximately 450 student-athletes are guided through their academic careers by the Intercollegiate Athletic Department's Academic and Student Services Office, under the direction of assistant athletic directors Jill DeMichele and Sandy Hatfield-Clubb.

From the time a freshman student-athlete comes to the ASU campus, services are available to keep the student on a steady course of academic progress. Incoming freshmen are provided with orientation to the university, its colleges and student services. All freshmen and transfer students receive a copy of the ASU Student Athlete Handbook, which highlights academic services and important university information. The student-athlete is ultimately responsible for his or her own success in the classroom.

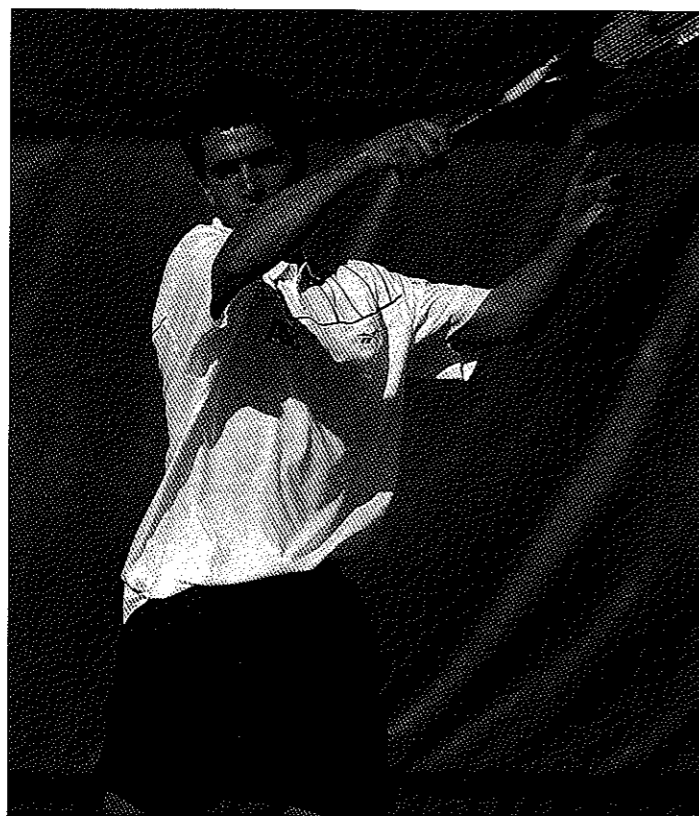

Throughout their academic careers, ASU track & field student-athletes are assigned with academic counselor Bettie Julkes. The strict academic and NCAA demands placed on a student-athlete differ from all other students, therefore counselors maintain regular communication with student-athletes to assist them with course selection and plans or programs of study. The academic counselors work with student-athletes only, and are specialized in complying with the requirements placed on student-athletes.

All new football freshmen and transfer student-athletes are required to attend study hall sessions. Study hall provides an opportunity for the student-athletes to maximize their time. The ASU athletic department's Intercollegiate Athletic Complex in Sun Devil Stadium houses the Academic and Student Services offices on the third floor. On the sixth floor, an academic computer site allows student-athletes to do word processing and academic assignments on Apple and IBM computers and four study hall rooms provide space for studying and meeting tutors.

A student-athlete needing additional help in a specific subject may request a tutor. Tutors assist student-athletes on an individual or group basis. Each student-athlete's grades and attendance are also closely monitored through an academic progress report, filled out by classroom instructors two times per semester.

Some additional services for student-athletes include assistance with the basic student needs of housing and financial aid through Bill Kennedy, Assistant to the Athletic Director on Administration and Compliance, and of eligibility through John Park, Assistant Athletic Director for Senior Sergio Elias has proven his ability to combine academics and athletics. He has maintained a 3.40 GPA in finance while turning in solid results on the court.

Compliance and Recruitment.

Success in the classroom provides the student-athlete with a number of rewards. Among those is the Summer School Enrichment Program. The athletic department encourages student-athletes to continue their studies in the summer months, at a time when athletic demands are lighter. Summer school enrollment also allows student-athletes to realize their goal of graduation in a shorter period of time.

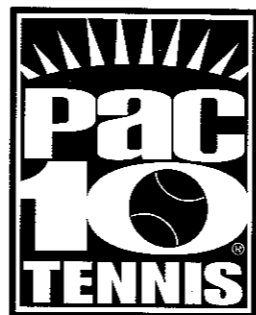

Student-athletes who are eligible for a fifth year of aid can qualify for ASU's post-eligibility program, sponsored by the Board of Regents and the Sun Angel Foundation Endowment. This program provides athletically-related financial aid in an amount comparable to the student-athlete's scholarship during the years of eligibility. The basic requirements are completion of at least 24 hours in the prior academic year, good academic standing, within 30 hours of graduation, and a 2.0 cumulative GPA. Post-eligibility student-athletes also gain valuable internship experience by working in the Athletic Department.

Student-athletes who earned a 3.0 or higher GPA in the previous fall or spring semester, or had a cumulative GPA of 3.0 or higher, were invited by President Dr. Lattie F. Coor to attend the annual Maroon and Gold Scholar-Athlete Luncheon. The 176 student-athletes from all sports received a plaque honoring their academic achievement. A graduation luncheon, given in December and May by Director of Athletics Kevin White, is also held for all graduating student-athletes.

ASU sponsors an annual Career Day for student-athletes to explore career opportunities. Former student-athletes and community members spend a Saturday morning talking about their profession. This event helps student-athletes find internships or summer jobs and clarify their career goals.

Throughout their academic careers, ASU student-athletes are reminded that dedication and self discipline are as important in the classroom as on the playing field. Maintaining a positive attitude toward academics is stressed, as well as developing the desire to succeed semester after semester. ASU recruits student-athletes with lofty academic and athletic goals and the personal discipline to achieve them. This has resulted in more student-athletes who graduate while also excelling in athletics.

President Lattie F. Coor

Lattie F. Coor became the 15th president of Arizona State University Jan. 1, 1990 and immediately made his mark.

In his March 1990 inauguration address, Coor described his vision for ASU as a world-class university serving the Valley of the Sun through multiple campuses and facilities.

The manifestations of his vision have been unfolding ever since. He has strengthened the role of ASU West, and he has opened ASU East at the site of the former Williams Air Force Base to meet anticipated enrollment growth.

Coor also has addressed problems of too-rapid growth and their impact on undergraduate instruction on the ASU main campus. For example, he launched the Campus Communities project in 1991 to bring together lower-division students with common interests to help them focus their academic energies.

He has launched a set of bold new initiatives to improve graduation rates, expose students to the very best faculty and guarantee them the opportunity to earn their degrees in four years.

ASU's progress has been substantial already.

After just a quarter-century as a university, ASU joined the ranks of Research I institutions, the elite of American universities, in 1994. Throughout Coor's term, ASU's national reputation has continued to grow in all endeavors.

From the beginning, Coor's priority has been to attract and retain the best faculty and staff available, and he has fought to make ASU salaries competitive. He also has insisted that ASU emphasize diversity in its communities and in its scholarly endeavors. The Anti-Defamation League of Phoenix honored Coor in 1994 for his efforts to nurture the cultural diversity of the university while protecting people's freedom to express even unpopular ideas.

An Arizona native, Coor graduated from Northern Arizona University. His father was a member of the 1928 Arizona State College Bulldog football team. His mother has never missed an ASU home football game.

Coor served 14 years as president of the University of Vermont (UVM) before he succeeded J. Russell Nelson at ASU.

Coor has said that the ASU presidency allows him to combine his greatest loves in life: Arizona and education. His parents were both educators, so he grew up valuing education. He has been on college campuses since he arrived at what was then Arizona State College in Flagstaff in 1954 as a Phelps Dodge Scholar.

Coor joined the political science faculty at Washington University after earning his doctorate in 1964. He had already become involved in university administration as assistant to the chancellor in 1963.

In 1969, Coor was named vice chancellor of Washington University, a post he held until going to UVM in 1976, where, at age 39, he became one of the youngest university presidents in the country.

In addition to his initiatives aimed at improving the quality of education at ASU, Coor has called for government, business and community leaders to join in a partnership with the university to provide first-rate education and research opportunities.

Noting that every major metropolitan area in the United States has at least one major research institution, Coor has suggested that the futures of the greater Phoenix area and ASU are intricately linked. He has said that ASU will be a full partner in the area's economic future.

He was a charter member of the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Presidents Commission and served as chairman of Division I. He is a strong supporter of quality athletic programs as a part of campus life. Coor was instrumental in the battle to approve NCAA Proposition 30, which shortened basketball seasons and football spring training sessions in order to give student-athletes more time to pursue their degrees.

Director of Athletics Kevin White

Kevin White, the Director of Athletics at Tulane University for the past five years, was named as Arizona State University's 17th Athletic Director, ASU President Dr. Lattie Coor announced Wednesday, March 27 at a news conference.

White, 45 (9/25/50), was tabbed following a year-long search in which ASU Vice President for Student Affairs Dr. Christine K. Wilkinson served as interim Director of Athletics. White was chosen from a large initial group of candidates and from a list of four finalists.

Under White's tutelage, Tulane's athletic program flourished. The Green Wave men's basketball team advanced to the 1996 NIT finals in New York City before losing in the semifinal. In 1994-95, four Tulane teams advanced to postseason competition. Both the men's and women's basketball teams advanced to the NCAA Tournament, with the women making their first trip ever. In addition, the Wave had two NCAA Championship qualifiers in women's track and field and its first men's tennis participant in NCAA Championship play in 26 years.

White recently addressed Tulane's gender equity needs, spearheading a $9 million stabilization fund-raising effort which added two women's varsity sports, provided a full compliment of NCAA scholarships in all sports (by 1998) and provided enhanced operational funding.

White serves on numerous national committees, including recently being named to the NCAA Council, the highest governing body in the NCAA, and to the executive committee of the Division I-A Athletic Directors Association.

An adjunct associate professor of education at Tulane, White also hosted a weekly radio talk show on WWL Radio, wherein he discussed the past, present and future of Green Wave athletics and issues that confronted college athletics.

Prior to becoming Director of Athletics at Tulane, White served in that same capacity at the University of Maine from 1987 through 1991. While there, White directed a program which excelled on the field and in the classroom and one that many described as the most progressive in the Northeast. In 1989-90, Maine captured conference championships and qualified for postseason play in football, baseball, ice hockey, women's basketball and golf.

White cut his teeth in college administration at Loras College in Dubuque, Iowa, where he served as Athletic Director and Vice President for Development from 1982-87. He supervised the college's $15 million capital campaign, in addition to a $1.2 million annual fund, planned giving, alumni relations, college publications and public relations. He also founded and served as executive director of the National Catholic Basketball Tournament.

During his coaching career, White served as head track and field coach at Southeast Missouri State and Central Michigan University, coaching several NCAA all-Americans and two national champions. He began his coaching career at Gulf High School in New Port Richey, Fla.

White holds a Ph.D. in education from Southern Illinois, a master's degree in athletic administration from Central Michigan and a bachelor's degree in business administration from St. Joseph's College in Rensselaer (Ind.) in 1972, while competing as a sprinter on the track and field team. In 1985 he completed post-doctoral work at the Institute for Educational Management at Harvard University.

White was born in Amityville, N.Y. His wife Jane holds a master's degree in physical education from Central Michigan. The first family of ASU athletics has five children — Maureen, (who recently graduated from Tulane), Michael (a sophomore point guard at the University of Mississippi), Daniel, Brian and Mariah.

The Sun Devil Club

1995 NCAA Singles Champion Sargis Sargsian.

The Sun Devil Club, in its third decade of service to Arizona State University and under the direction of President Dean Jacobson, is recognized as one of the largest athletic support groups for collegiate sports in the country. More than 13,000 members belong to this ambitious organization, which has raised in excess of $10 million for Arizona State University athletics.

Founded in June of 1968, the Sun Devil Club began with a nucleus of 15 individuals who had the idea of providing club members with the best possible seating to athletic events and to have more people identify with ball reception and study area.

Basketball has received many benefits, including a conference and study room, videotape equipment and the upgrade of locker rooms. The Club also plays host to the annual Alumni Game, along with providing the holiday tournament and ball boy uniforms.

ASU's baseball team can thank the Sun Devil Club for the lighting at Packard Stadium, the Astro Turf batting tunnels and the pitching machines, along with the highly-visible scoreboard and the newly furnished locker rooms. At the track and field stadium, the Club furnished the Arizona State University and Sun Devils athletics.

Since its inception, the Sun Devil Club's donations have helped better facilities and equipment for all 20 ASU's men's and women's sports.

The Club contributed funds for the construction of Sun Devil Club softball stadium. This complex, which is completely lighted, is considered one of the finest softball facilities in the country. Sun Devil Stadium, with a seating capacity of nearly 74,000, has seat backs due to financing from the Sun Devil Club and scoreboards on the east side of the field. The Club has provided funds for an Olympic-style weight room and foot-pole vault jumping pit, the Acutrack timing system and wind gauge and a tartan track among its donations.

The swimming and diving teams have received underwater camera equipment and a race memory timing system. The Sun Devil wrestling program has received significant support from the Club, including the purchase of a new Datronics clock and video equipment, a new practice mat, reconditioned meet matting and team equipment.

Arizona State's women's gymnastics team received competition and workout equipment, including a modern landing pit and video equipment.

The Whiteman Tennis Center now sports eight beautiful courts and seating for 800 spectators, thanks to the Sun Devil Club.

The Sun Devil Club donates all conference awards (both individual and team) for each sport and special scholarship awards and team banquets.

The refurbishing and refurbishing of the athletic administration and media relations offices and an endowment fund established to pay for books for student-athletes is all part of the Sun Devil Club's work.

More recently the Sun Devil Club has been responsible for the construction of Sun Devil Club Plaza in the ASU Arboretum Park adjacent to the University Activity Center. The outdoor patio at the Karsten Golf Course was funded by the Sun Devil Club.

Due to the generosity of the Sun Devil Club, the Olympic Sport media guides have been upgraded.

Arizona State University and the community would like to thank the Sun Devil Club for its continued support of Sun Devil intercollegiate athletics.
