vs. PRINCETON

At print time, the only loss for either Dartmouth or Princeton since the start of the 2018 season came in last year's epic clash at Princeton Stadium. The Tigers emerged from that contest as 14-9 victors en route to a perfect 10-0 campaign and an Ivy League crown, while the Big Green finished the year 9-1 and was forced to settle for second place.

Now Dartmouth is looking to avenge that defeat with the two teams both sporting perfect records once again entering the weekend of Nov. 2, and the stats bear out another monumental showdown in the making. The Big Green and Princeton both have explosive offenses, ranking first and second nationally in scoring, respectively. And both have extraordinarily stingy defenses, ranking first and fifth in points allowed.

Dartmouth features the quarterbacking tandem of Jared Gerbino and Derek Kyler that last year were switched back and forth liberally during possessions. This season, the duo have generally played full series with Gerbino shedding his "wildcat" label to give both more balanced options for attacking a defense, keeping opponents on their heels.

Princeton, on the other hand, graduated its star quarterback but found a suitable replacement in Kevin Davidson, who has twice thrown for at least five touchdown passes in a game this year, a first in Tiger history. He also ranks among the top 10 nationally in completion percentage, passing efficiency and yards per game.

Both defenses have been opportunistic through six games with Dartmouth forcing 11 turnovers (six picks) and Princeton 12, all but one of which has been an interception. The Big Green feature linebackers Nigel Alexander and Jack Traynor as the leading tacklers, plus 2018 consensus All-American Isiah Swann as the top cover man. The Tigers average three sacks a game with linebackers James Johnson and Jeremiah Tyler the top two tacklers on the team.

The Tigers are under the care of the Charles W. Caldwell Jr. '25 Head Coach of Football, Bob Surace, in his 10th campaign with the Tigers and entered the season with a record of 48-42 with three conference crowns (2013, '16, '18) to his credit. His other head coaching experience came at Western Connecticut State where he led the Colonials to an overall record of 18-3 in 2000 and '01. He was an All-Ivy first-team center back in 1989 at Princeton, which won a share of the conference crown, making him and Buddy Teevens the only two coaches in the league to win Ivy titles as a player and a head coach.

COACHING STAFF

ROBERT L. BLACKMAN HEAD FOOTBALL COACH BUDDY TEEVENS '79

Eugene F. (Buddy) Teevens III, who as an honorable mention All-America quarterback led Dartmouth to the 1978 Ivy League championship, has won three more conference titles in 19 years as the Big Green head coach. He first earned back-to-back crowns in 1990 and 1991, then gradually rebuilt the program after returning in 2005 to guide Dartmouth to its league-record 18th Ivy League title in 2015 with a 6-1 mark in the Ivy League and a 9-1 overall record.

Last year's squad posted an identical record to the 2015 championship team and was ranked 15th in the final national FCS coaches' poll. Three of his players earned All-America honors, including the Ivy League Defensive Player of the Year and Division I leader in interceptions, Isiah Swann.

Teevens, 63, had his first stint as Dartmouth's head coach from 1987 through 1991, sharing the 1990 Ivy title with Cornell before winning it outright the following fall. The two-time New England Coach of the Year (1990 and 2015) enters the 2019 season with a 96-92-2 record with the Big Green with 75 first-team All-Ivy League selections.

Teevens holds the Robert L. Blackman Endowed Coaching Position, named in memory of Bob Blackman, who coached Dartmouth from 1955 to 1970, and created through the gift of Henry M. (Hank) Paulson

'68, an outstanding offensive tackle who played for Blackman from 1965-67.

In addition to restoring Dartmouth's rich football tradition, Teevens has been an integral force in a series of major improvements to Dartmouth's football facilities, including installation of a FieldTurf surface on Memorial Field for the 2006 season; the opening of the new Floren Varsity House that includes training, dressing and meeting facilities in 2007; light towers in 2011; the video scoreboard in 2013; the renovated West Stands and new press box in 2015; and a fresh, new FieldTurf surface prior to the 2016 campaign.

Teevens began his coaching career at DePauw University in 1979. After six years on the staff at Boston University, he undertook his first head-coaching gig at the University of Maine (1986-87). Other head coaching stops included Tulane (1992-96) and Stanford (2002-04) with stops at Illinois (1997-98) and Florida (1999-2001) on the staffs for Ron Turner and Steve Spurrier, respectively.

Highly regarded in football circles, Teevens has been an integral part of the famed Manning Passing Academy in each of its 24 seasons of operation. He serves as an associate director of the camp, overseeing all aspects of the on-field operation and coaching staff. In 2018, he organized the camp's first clinic for women coached by women in 2018, then hired one of the coaches to become the first full-time female Division I coach that fall in Callie Brownson.

The Teevens Family

Teevens is also an advocate for making the game of football safer, beginning with banning the tackling of players in all Big Green practices in 2011. He has been on panels for "Practice Like Pros" to extol the virtues of cutting down on full-contact practices by focusing on technique. Teevens was instrumental in the development of the Mobile Virtual Player (MVP), a robotic tackling dummy, invented by staff and students of Dartmouth's Thayer School of Engineering. The MVP is now in use at numerous NFL and college practices to help cut down on the number of player-on-player hits and reduce injuries. In addition, he serves on the NCAA committee on competitive safeguards and medical aspects of sports.

A native of Pembroke, Massachusetts, Teevens and his wife, Kirsten, have two children: Lindsay lives in Lebanon, New Hampshire, with her husband Matt, daughter Caroline and son Jack, while Buddy Jr. lives in Hanover with his wife McKeanna, son Eugene V and daughter Leila.

DARTMOUTH ATHLETIC SPONSORS

JOIN THE FRIENDS OF DARTMOUTH FOOTBALL

The Friends of Dartmouth Football, more than 1,300 members strong, provide vital support for the Dartmouth football program. The primary purpose is to enhance the experience of the student-athletes by providing funding for needs that cannot be covered by the College's budget but are essential to operating a first-class varsity football program.

Contributors are invited to attend the Friends/Sponsors tent for pre- and post-game receptions at all home football games. In addition, Friends receive "The Green Line" Dartmouth football newsletter as well as an invitation to the annual Dartmouth Football Golf Classic.

Many Friends are also actively involved in:

- Dartmouth Football Regional Events
- Cultivation of internships and job opportunities for Big Green players
- The Dartmouth Football Mentor Program

Q & A WITH

RYAN ROEGGE
JARED GERBINO
DAVIS BRIEF &
T.J. SIMPSON

— compiled by Charlotte Brackett & Pat Salvas —

What made you want to attend Dartmouth?

Ryan Roegge: I wanted to come to Dartmouth because of its rare combination of great academics and a beautiful location. The football coaches here made it an easy decision to spend four years with such great support and career opportunities.

Jared Gerbino: I fell in love with the “family” concept that was so often preached to me by all of the coaches and guys on the team. I really had the feeling that everyone wanted the best for me and would really value me as a person with goals outside of athletics.

Davis Brief: The opportunities for outdoor activities at Dartmouth was a huge selling point for me. Dartmouth is less than half an hour away from skiing, downhill mountain biking, cliff jumping, hiking and swimming in the Connecticut River. In addition to the outdoors, the people at Dartmouth are why I ultimately decided to come here. People smile at you when you walk by and go out of their way to help you in any way possible. I think that’s what really makes Dartmouth special to me.

T.J. Simpson: I wanted to pursue my dream of playing college football while also taking advantage of a top-notch education.

What is one memory from your time with the Big Green that you will never forget?

RR: The most special memory for me so far as a Dartmouth football player was our win over Harvard last year in front of our home crowd. It was special to be able to win that game for all of the alumni and coaches who have seen so many close games with Harvard over the years. Breaking that streak was important to a lot of people, and I’m happy I was able to be a part of it.

JG: One memory will be the countless times we have sung the alma mater where we have a huge number of fans singing along with us.

DB: Beating Harvard at Homecoming in 2018 for the first win over the Crimson in 15 years.

TS: I will never forget Homecoming 2017, when we came back from a 21-point deficit against Yale.

What are your post-Dartmouth plans?

RR: I am currently going through the job recruitment process but would like to end up working for a consulting firm in D.C., Atlanta or Boston after graduating in June.

JG: At this point, I am unsure. I wish to pursue a football career after college; however, I would love to work with the British Premier League in England. The soccer industry is very entertaining to me and I could see myself working within such a system.

TS: I plan to pursue a career in marketing and advertising.

If you could travel anywhere in the world right now, where would it be and why?

RR: I would want to travel all over Europe. There is so much I have learned about the area in my time at Dartmouth, so I would love to see all of the historical sites in person.

JG: I would travel to either Italy/Sicily where my family is from, or to Greece. I believe both of these places are so beautiful and I have yet to leave this country for any reason so I think that would be fun.

TS: I would travel to Jamaica, because of the beautiful scenery and authentic cuisine.

Other than your parents, who has had the biggest influence on your life?

JG: My brother, without a doubt. He has taught me the most in life and I am always chasing him, trying to live up to be the man that he is. I'm a proud younger brother and wouldn't be who I am today without him.

DB: My grandmother, Heather Pargeter, has had the biggest influence on my life. She taught me what true kindness looks like and showed me how to be strong and confident in my decisions. Some of my favorite memories are playing board games in her living room even as she showed no mercy while playing Monopoly. In true British fashion, she always had a kettle on the stove with tea ready to go and would make sure she had time to enjoy it outside in the garden. Heather taught me to always make time for yourself and those you care about, and to go out of your way to have a positive impact on strangers as well.

TS: My great-grandmother would have to be my biggest influence. She has endured a lot in her lifetime and is still standing today.

What is your favorite memory of your childhood?

JG: My favorite memory is being surrounded by my family (40 +) cousins and enjoying holidays and downtime with both my family and closest friends.

DB: Almost anything I've done with my brother, Spencer, qualifies as a favorite childhood memory. Swimming in the ocean, playing Legos, or having him beat levels on Xbox that I couldn't get past are all up there. Having a brother who's also my best friend meant that just about everything we did together qualifies as a favorite memory.

TS: My favorite childhood memory is going to Busch Gardens with my mom. Back then, I used to love roller coasters, but now I am afraid of heights.

If you could swap places with one of your teammates, who would it be and why?

JG: I would swap places with Drew Estrada because I have always wanted to know what it is like to be so athletic, fast, in shape, good-looking, and an overall exemplary young man.

DB: Has to be Jared Gerbino. Who wouldn't want to be a 6-4, 225-pound beast with a mustache like that for a day?

TS: I would swap places with Darren Stanley, because he is arguably the most athletic guy on the team.

What does being a member of the Big Green family mean to you?

RR: It has started to mean more to me the longer I have been at Dartmouth. There are countless alumni who I have spoken to or emailed with who all have the same love and passion for our school. It's difficult to explain, but there is just something special about knowing how much support each of us gets from our professors, coaches and classmates. It really is a family, and whenever I run into a random Dartmouth alum while I'm at home, they are always very excited to talk about their times at this school and are willing to help me out in any way that they can.

JG: It means everything to me. Often, I find myself confused as to where I will end up in the future, but I always find comfort in the present realizing that I get to play next to my closest friends every weekend. Football has been an outlet for me for my entire life and, at this age, I realize how important it has been in teaching me life lessons. Without this game I wouldn't be who I am today. I owe my teammates, coaches and friends from all levels a thank you for making this game so special.

DB: Being a part of the Dartmouth football team means counting on your teammates and making sure they can count on you. This team is a brotherhood, and everyone has to do their part to make sure things run smoothly. It's about being committed to being the best athlete and best teammate you can be, and working hard even when your teammates aren't watching. Every person on the team has an impact on our success, and the guys are committed to doing whatever it takes to win.

TS: The camaraderie on this team is unmatched. It is an honor to be a part of such a family. I have formed relationships here that will last a lifetime.

If you could go back to freshman year and give yourself advice, what would it be?

RR: I would tell myself to enjoy the process. Those first few years went by fast, so I would try to appreciate the little things about Dartmouth that make it such a unique place to go to school.

JG: I would tell myself to work even harder. To never be complacent. To always put in extra work. Your time here goes fast, so you have to make the most of it. I wish I would've tried to seek the value of this place and its people sooner in my career; however I have found peace with where I am now at Dartmouth and will forever be thankful for the time I got to spend here.

DB: I'd tell myself that you can always work harder. Whether it's readings for school, workouts for sports or deadlines for an internship. There's always a way to improve, sometimes it just takes more trial and error than expected. I'd also tell myself that failing is okay and a normal part of college. You may not make every group or pass every test, but that can lead to more personal growth or other great opportunities.

TS: Don't take Math 11 freshman fall.

What you most like about living in the Upper Valley?

RR: The weather at certain times of year. It doesn't get much better than Hanover weather in the summer and beginning of the fall.

JG: Nature.

DB: My favorite part about living in the Upper Valley is discovering new things. It seems like there's always a restaurant I haven't been to yet, a trail I haven't hiked, or a swimming hole I haven't found. The opportunity to go on new adventures with friends always leads to finding something new.

TS: Despite the harsh weather in the winter, being in the Upper Valley is a nice change of pace from being in a big city like Tampa or Miami.

Who would play you in the movie version of your life?

JG: Sacha Baron Cohen.

DB: Chris Hemsworth. I'm told we have the same biceps.

TS: It would have to be Omar Epps, because people say we look alike.

You step outside tomorrow morning and you find a lottery ticket that ends up winning $10 million (after taxes). What would you do with the money?

RR: I would probably buy both of my parents new cars, take some trips around the world with my family and friends, and invest the rest.

JG: Pay off my college, pay off anything my parents owe, buy them a house, and build a house for myself and my brother.

TS: I'd buy a house for my family for roughly a million. I'd take another million and share it with my close friends as a gift. I would give another million to some sort of charity, invest another million into various assets, and save the remainder of the money.

Outside of sports, what are you most passionate about?

RR: I've always been interested in Christian theology and apologetics, so I hope to spend more time reading and learning more once the season is over. I've also been starting to become more interested in golf as I get ready for my transition from being a varsity athlete to a regular student.

JG: I'm passionate about kindness. I believe that one of the most important factors in life is to treat people with respect and kindness. Life is too short to be upset or judgmental. Kindness goes a long way.

DB: Definitely music. I've played the drums for over ten years now and it's a huge part of my life. I play in a band on campus and am in a few percussion groups as well. It's a great way to decompress and destress when school gets overwhelming.

TS: Outside of sports, I am most passionate about music and art. I believe they play an important role in society in terms of the inspiration they offer. From a creative standpoint, I think it's important for everyone to have some sort of outlet of expression separate from school, sports, work, etc.

Dartmouth Goes Professional ... Stadium

by Jack DeGange

Think back 100 years: 1919.

Four sports dominated newspaper headlines — baseball (east of the Mississippi River, at least), boxing, horse racing, college football.

Since this is a review of college football played in professional venues, including today's game in new Yankee Stadium, it's worth recalling that old Yankee Stadium might never have been built (it opened in 1923) without the trade announced in the last week of 1919: The Boston Red Sox sold pitcher-outfielder George Herman Ruth to the New York Yankees for $100,000 (cash).

Pro football? The National Football League didn't play its first game, in the manufacturing outpost of Canton, Ohio, until 1920. How times have changed.

One hundred years ago, from September to November, college football usually was the lead story atop every Sunday sports page.

While the baseball parks in New York and Boston are where this story begins, on-campus stadiums that came to dot the academic landscape measure football's place in the sporting firmament, starting with Harvard Stadium (1903), Yale Bowl and Princeton's Palmer Stadium (1914). Penn's Franklin Field, regarded as the oldest stadium still operating for football, dates to 1895 but the current structure was built in the 1920s.

In the first half-century of a game now celebrating its 150th birthday, it was the eastern universities and colleges that fielded the game's most dominant teams — in the biggest stadiums. They would be matched or surpassed during the 1920s as the game gained a foothold in the Midwest, South and along the Pacific Coast.

Where was Dartmouth in the ascension of a sport that survived the threat of banishment due to rampant injuries (and more than a few deaths) in the early 1900s?

The Green's football team had come a long way from its lopsided (113-0) loss to Yale in 1884 to its 11-0 victory in the dedication game of Harvard Stadium in 1903.

From 1901 to 1910, Dartmouth built a record of 68-12-9. Dartmouth was becoming, in every sense, "more than an Eastern college."

The hills of New Hampshire were, and remain, a source of the college's magnetic attraction. But, in an era long before the interstate highway system, when railroads were the principal means of long-distance travel to and from Hanover (where hotel accommodations were limited), it made sense to bring Dartmouth football to its growing audience, especially its alumni in and around Boston and New York.

And, new rivalries were developing with the universities that would become Dartmouth's most valued rivals, long before the Ivy League was formed in the mid-1950s — Brown, Columbia, Cornell, Penn — in addition to Harvard, Princeton and Yale.

It made logistical, not to mention economic, sense to bring these games to the professional ballparks in New York and Boston. Plus, they involved the best teams in the country. From the first time a national champion was recognized in 1889 until 1915 (when Cornell was recognized), that honor belonged to one of Dartmouth's rivals 22 times in 27 years: Princeton, Harvard, Yale or Penn.

Dartmouth traveled to New York City in 1899 when it played Columbia for the first time. The game was played at Manhattan Field, in the shadow of Coogan's Bluff, hard by the Harlem River at the northern tip of Manhattan Island and predecessor to the better-remembered Polo Grounds.

Columbia, which fielded no varsity teams from 1892-98, won the game, 22-0. It was one of seven losses for Dartmouth's last team of the 19th century.

In 1904, Dartmouth defeated Brown, 12-5, at the Huntington Avenue Grounds in Boston, home of the Red Sox before Fenway Park opened in 1912. The Huntington Grounds, now part of the Northeastern University campus, was the site (in 1903) of the first modern World Series between the Red Sox and the Pittsburgh Pirates.

From 1908 until 1924 and annually during the six years following the end of World War I, Dartmouth played 13 games at the third and fourth iterations of Polo Grounds.

Over seven decades from 1891 until it was demolished in 1964, the Polo Grounds was the baseball home to the Giants (until they moved to San Francisco in 1957), the Yankees (1913 until the Stadium opened in 1923), and the Mets during their first two seasons (1962-63).

In football, the Polo Grounds was also home for the New York Giants from 1925-55 (they played at Yankee Stadium from 1956-73, then relocated to New Jersey). And, the Jets (then known as the Titans) played at the Polo Grounds from 1960 until they followed the Mets to Shea Stadium in 1964.

Dartmouth played its first two games against Princeton at the Polo Grounds in 1908 and 1910, beating the Tigers, 10-6, before losing, 6-0, to a Tiger team that would finish 8-0-2 in 1911 and claim the national title.

In 1913, a year after the legendary Jim Thorpe had graduated and achieved Olympic fame, Dartmouth returned to the Polo Grounds to face the Carlisle Indian Industrial School, coached by Glenn (Pop) Warner. Thorpe was gone but Carlisle was still very good, beating Dartmouth, 35-10.

With the exception of 1916, from 1913-24, Dartmouth played at least one game each season in a professional ballpark.

From 1914-18, the games were in Boston either at Fenway Park or Braves Field. Dartmouth beat Syracuse at Fenway Park, 40-0, in 1914. In 1915, they beat Penn at Fenway Park, 7-3, but lost to the Quakers, 7-0, in 1917 at Braves Field (now the site of Boston University's Nickerson Field).

In 1919, the college celebrated its 150th birthday with four memorable games. A game at Alumni Oval (predecessor to Memorial Field that opened in 1923) saw Dartmouth defeat Penn State, 19-13. A week later at the Polo Grounds, the Green defeated Cornell, 9-0, while Penn State was beating Penn.

The closest Dartmouth has come to playing at Yankee Stadium was in 1965 and 1969 when the team practiced there prior to games at Princeton.

Two weeks later, again at the Polo Grounds, in one of the era's memorable contests, Dartmouth built a lead and then held on to defeat the Quakers, 20-19, bringing its record to 6-0-1. The Green's season came undone in the finale at Braves Field as Brown eked out a 7-6 win.

In 1920, Dartmouth beat Cornell, 14-3, at the Polo Grounds. After beating Brown, 14-6, at Braves Field, the Green took a transcontinental train ride to Seattle and closed their season with a 27-7 victory over Washington in the dedication game of the Huskies' new stadium.

In 1921 and 1922, Dartmouth played four times at the Polo Grounds, tying Penn and losing to Syracuse in 1921. In 1922, the Green lost to Cornell's second straight national championship team, 23-0 (one of 26 straight Cornell wins from 1921-24), but then beat Columbia (28-7) at the Polo Grounds and closed the season with a 7-0 win over Brown at Fenway Park.

The run of games in New York and Boston ended in 1923 and 1924. Wins over Brown (16-14 at Fenway Park) and Columbia (31-6 at the Polo Grounds) in 1923 started an unbeaten streak of 22 straight games (21-0-1) that continued into the 1926 season. That streak included a 27-14 win over Cornell at the Polo Grounds in 1924 and an undefeated (8-0-0) national championship season in 1925.

All told, Dartmouth has played 30 games in pro sports venues. All but seven were contested from 1899-1924.

It would be 15 years before Dartmouth made another appearance in a professional stadium.

After posting a 7-2 record in 1938 that included

In 2017, Dartmouth defeated Brown, 33-10, in the team's first game at Fenway Park since playing Notre Dame in 1944.

a 23-13 cross-country loss at Stanford, Coach Earl Blaik's 1939 team played a scoreless tie with Navy at Baltimore's Municipal Stadium (future home of both the Colts and Orioles) and then faced Stanford in an East-West rematch at the Polo Grounds.

That game, played "before thousands of empty seats on a dismal day" on December 2, ended in a 14-3 loss for Dartmouth, an underwhelming end to a season that began 5-0-1 and finished with losses to Stanford as well as to a Princeton team that was 7-1 and to Cornell which was 8-0 and claimed a national title.

During World War II, in part as a nod to travel efficiency, Dartmouth played two neutral site games with Cornell. In 1942, at Civic Stadium in Buffalo (renamed War Memorial Stadium in 1960, it was an occasional "home" venue for the team from Ithaca and future home of the Buffalo Bills of the AFL and NFL), Dartmouth lost, 21-19. A year later at Fenway Park, the Green defeated Cornell, 20-0.

That was a breath of fresh air compared to Dartmouth's 1944 encounter with Notre Dame's wartime powerhouse that obliterated the Green, 64-0, the last time Dartmouth played at Fenway Park for 73 years.

The Big Green's return to Fenway came almost exactly two years ago on a Friday night, November 10, 2017 against Brown. It was a cold, raw evening that was braved by about 13,000 hardy souls who watched Dartmouth take a 33-10 victory over the host Bears.

There's one more stadium venue to recall, 36 years ago when Dartmouth played Columbia at Giants Stadium in East Rutherford, New Jersey.

It was the season when Columbia played its home games in New Jersey while tearing down archaic Baker Field and building its current home, Lawrence A. Wien Stadium.

The game was memorable for two reasons: First, a 32-yard field goal by Craig Saltzgaber on the last play of the game gave Dartmouth a 17-17 tie.

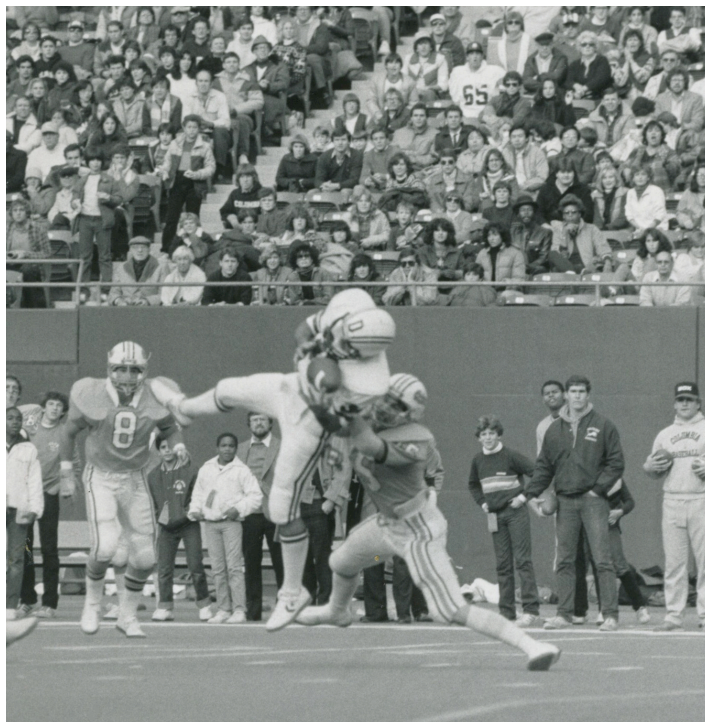

Second, for Columbia, which had lost at Holy Cross the week before, it was the only non-loss for the Lions in a streak of 46 games without a win (0-45-1) that extended into the 1988 season when they finally beat Princeton, 16-13. (Columbia then proceeded to lose its next five games.)

For the record, Princeton has played three games in Yankee Stadium, albeit the old one ("The House that Ruth Built"). In 1931, the Tigers lost to Columbia, 13-0. In 1942, they played two games at the Stadium, beating Navy, 10-0, and, a month later, losing to Army, 40-7.

All of this brings us to Yankee Stadium — where Dartmouth has never played a game but has some interesting history.

Two of Coach Bob Blackman's Dartmouth teams, in 1965 and again in 1969, stopped at Yankee Stadium en route to games at Princeton.

In 1965, Princeton was the defending Ivy League champion and brought a 17-game win streak to the game. The Tigers' last loss had been to Dartmouth, 22-21, in the 1963 finale when the teams ended as co-champs.

Prior to the 2017 game at Fenway Park, Dartmouth's last game in a pro stadium was a 17-17 tie against Columbia played at Giants Stadium in 1983.

Dartmouth had completed an undefeated season in 1962 with a 38-27 win at Princeton. In 1965 the Green was 8-0 heading to Palmer Stadium.

When he could, Blackman liked to make Friday's light workout memorable for his players. In 1965, thanks to long-time connections to the Yankees by Red Rolfe, the Dartmouth Director of Athletics and one of the Yankees' great third basemen prior to World War II, as well as Blackman's friendship with the Mara family, owners of the football Giants who played their home games at the Stadium in those days, the Big Green had a mid-day workout on the stadium's historic sod.

Tom Clarke, Dartmouth's captain and All-Ivy defensive end, tells the story:

"The old Yankee Stadium was electric as a bunch of wide-eyed 19-, 20- and 21-year olds stepped out of the dugout and into the house that Ruth built. The Giants were practicing in right field and we had the infield area.

"After practice, a game of faux baseball did break out. (Quarterback) Mickey Beard and maybe (halfback) Gene Ryzewicz (they were also the shortstop-second base combination on Dartmouth's baseball team) would pitch footballs and we would punch them and take off around the bases, sliding into second, third and home.

"The New York press, observing this, suggested to Blackman that we weren't taking Princeton seriously. Bob only smiled. It was part of his genius to understand that this would keep us loose for the next day."

Final score: Dartmouth 28, Princeton 14. Dartmouth secured an undefeated season, the Ivy title, and the Lambert Trophy as best team in the East.

Four years later, in 1969, Blackman thought "Stadium Magic" might work again. Dartmouth was again heading to Princeton with an 8-0 record (6-0 in Ivy games). Princeton had lost the week before to Yale, 17-14. Earlier, Yale had lost to Dartmouth, 42-21.

That Dartmouth team, which lost its final game at Princeton, 35-7, creating a three-way tie for the Ivy League title, held a 50th reunion of that season about a month ago. They still look back and wonder: What went wrong?

Was the atmosphere "flat" during the stadium workout? Did coaching adjustments simply not work? Did a squibbed quick kick, designed to improve Dartmouth's field position, open a door for the Tigers?

Ernie Babcock, Dartmouth's co-captain and defensive end 50 seasons ago, reflected:

"I don't recall that our practice lacked spark. Several players think that changes made in our defensive scheme for that game didn't work well. Everybody looks back at the quick kick as a turning point.

"Personally, I really enjoyed the practice. Growing up, we watched the Giants on TV every Sunday afternoon. As we were leaving practice, the Giants came on the field. I remember (fullback) Alex Webster was one of them.

"Finally, my dad taught me how to drop kick. Before leaving the field, I drop-kicked an extra point. It was good.

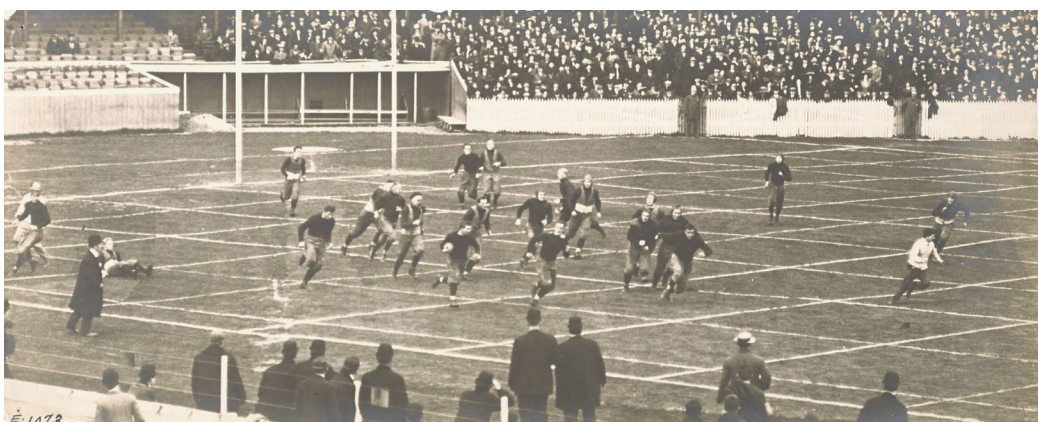

"Our game performance was not."

Painful as it was, that loss at Princeton provided incentive for Dartmouth's 1970 team that would stifle the Tigers, 38-0, en route to an undefeated season, another Lambert Trophy as the East's outstanding team, and the second of what would become five straight outright or shared Ivy League titles.

It's been 50 years since Dartmouth's football team ran onto the sod at Yankee Stadium (the old one, not the new one). Like so many times in the past, Dartmouth and Princeton will be playing a game with Ivy League championship implications.

Dartmouth coach Buddy Teevens will tell his players: Play your best. Feel the grass beneath your feet. Take in the surrounding view of the stadium that is a perspective reserved only for players. Enjoy Yankee Stadium, a once-in-a-lifetime experience.

Jack DeGange, a freelance writer, was Dartmouth's sports information director from 1968-77 and attended Dartmouth's workout at Yankee Stadium in 1969.

Dartmouth defeated Penn, 20-19, at the Polo Grounds in 1919.

Dartmouth has been commemorating the 250th anniversary of its founding throughout 2019 with a slate of celebrations, academic and arts programming, and an unprecedented service opportunity for the entire global community. Activities for the sestercentennial anniversary began in January with the theme “Honoring Our Past, Inspiring Our Future.”

“This is an ideal time to reaffirm our liberal arts foundation, our tradition of world-changing research, our profound sense of place, and the unique Dartmouth spirit,” said President Philip J. Hanlon ’77. “As we reflect on our history of impact and influence, we will also look ahead to a bright future creating new generations of leaders.”

Cheryl Bascomb ’82, vice president for alumni relations, said, “There is much to celebrate, much to learn, and much to consider. We’ve created many ways for the Dartmouth community to get involved. The anniversary is an opportunity for our global community to mark the enduring nature of our institution and to become inspired by—and participate in—where we’re going.”

The sestercentennial has been celebrated in a range of academic courses for students, at conferences and symposia, reunions and homecoming, and much more.

“Dartmouth’s 250th celebration bore the promise and challenge of a refounding moment in that it offered the entire Dartmouth fellowship the yearlong occasion to honor and learn from the best of what we are and have done and wholeheartedly embrace future possibilities for improving ourselves and the world,” said Donald Pease, the Geisel Third Century Professor in the Humanities, who co-chaired the 250th celebration with Bascomb.

The sestercentennial events, listed on the 250th website (250.dartmouth.edu) are organized into six areas:

Celebrations: Kicking off Dartmouth's 250th year was a day of celebrations that took place in locations all over campus on Jan. 10.

Special series have taken place throughout the year, including Dartmouth on Location 250 events — for alumni and other Dartmouth friends — in a number of U.S. cities, in which Dartmouth leaders and scholars talked with alumni and Dartmouth parents on a variety of issues. The first event was set in New York City on Jan. 12, hosted by CNN news anchor Jake Tapper '91 and actor David Harbour '97.

Also on Jan. 12, alumni and friends were encouraged to show their Dartmouth pride by wearing green clothing for Greenlighting Day, when landmarks around the world were illuminated in green light to celebrate the College's anniversary. The landmarks included: Niagara Falls; One World Trade Center and the Empire State Building, both in New York City; Boathouse Row, in Philadelphia; the Capital Ferris Wheel in National Harbor, Md., just outside Washington, D.C., and Dartmouth Hall. Alumni groups across the country and abroad were welcome to join Greenlighting Day on social media and with their own hometown landmarks awash in green light.

On July 26, Dartmouth hosted a summer celebration on the Green for the Upper Valley community that featured music, family activities, area vendors, a Friday night movie, and a Saturday night concert.

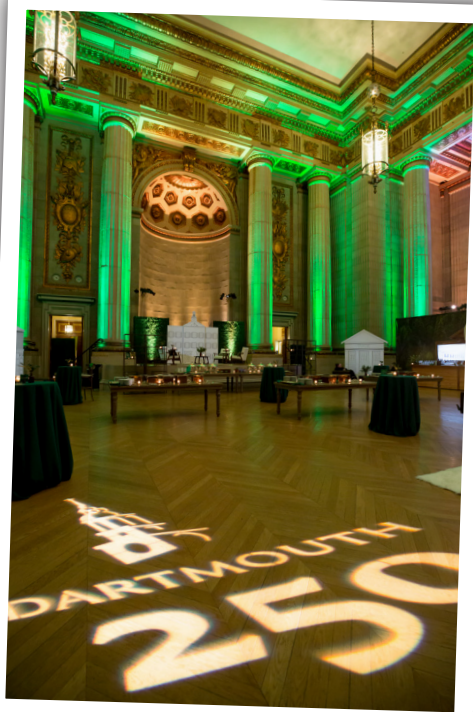

Learning and Ideas: Courses, conferences, and symposia were planned for the year, including a March 1 and 2 conference on the Dartmouth College Case, the landmark U.S. Supreme Court ruling in 1819 that held that the college would remain a private institution and not become a state university. As alumni through the ages have learned, arguing the case for Dartmouth was Daniel Webster, Class of 1801, who told the justices, "It is, sir, as I have said, a small college. And yet there are those who love it!" Legal experts say the case has great significance, with the court's decision determining that the U.S. Constitution's contract clause prohibits states from impairing a contract — in this case, Dartmouth's charter.

The legal ruling was the theme of a Dartmouth Library exhibit and the basis for a new undergraduate course, one of a number in the works for 2019 winter and spring terms. The course was taught by Pease, Professor of History Robert Bonner, and J. Russell Muirhead, the Robert Clements Professor of Democracy and Politics.

Also planned was a June 14 conference in Hanover on Dartmouth's vision of a liberal arts education for the 21st century. Conferences were also planned on 100 Years of Women on the Dartmouth faculty; the tumultuous year of 1969 (Dartmouth's 200th anniversary); and the college's relationship to slavery.

Courses focused on Dartmouth as a religion taught by Susan Ackerman '80, the Preston H. Kelsey Professor of Religion; Dartmouth fiction from Richard Hovey, Class of 1885, to Louise Erdrich '76, taught by James Dobson, a lecturer in English and in the Master of Arts in Liberal Studies program; Collective Memory of Slavery at Dartmouth, taught by Deborah Karyn King, an associate professor of sociology; and the legacy of George Ticknor, Class of 1807, for his seminal academic work in Spanish literature.

Service: A yearlong service initiative called The Call to Serve sought to involve thousands of community members — students, faculty, staff, and alumni — volunteering their time for meaningful causes, with a goal of donating a total of 250,000 volunteer hours. Members of the Dartmouth community were also invited to events around the country and abroad highlighting the impact of The Call to Lead (CallToLead.dartmouth.edu) fundraising campaign. Also related to the campaign, Dartmouth invited alumni and parents to support access and affordability for the future generations of Dartmouth students by creating 250 new scholarship endowments in Dartmouth's 250th year. Financial aid is a core component of The Call to Lead campaign, allowing Dartmouth to attract outstanding students regardless of their ability to pay tuition.

"We welcome the community's efforts to use this anniversary as an opportunity to make an impact around the globe," says Bascomb. "We hope our alumni and the entire Dartmouth community will answer the call to serve as well as the call to lead. We encourage you to initiate an event with your organization, your former athletic teams, your classmates, your friends. There is no better time than our anniversary to come together in the name of Dartmouth and to have an impact on our world."

Arts: The Hopkins Center for the Arts hosted a series of events in January that recognized Dartmouth's Native American history, including a documentary film, Rumble: The Indians Who Rocked the World, on Jan. 20 and, on Jan. 30, an evening of performances called Indigenous Rising: An Evening of NextGen Native Artists. On May 25, the Dartmouth Symphony Orchestra premiered a commissioned work inspired by the mural cycle painted in 1932-34 by José Clemente Orozco. The concert was recorded for rebroadcast on the National Public Radio show "From the Top." The murals, which have been designated a national historic landmark, are located in the Dartmouth Library reserve reading room and are considered one of the finest examples of mural painting in the country. A second 250th commission, this one for the Dartmouth College Wind Ensemble by composer Oliver Caplan '04, premiered this fall and highlighted special places at the college.

Exhibitions: In honor of the College's sestercentennial year, the Hood Museum of Art presented an exhibition of 25 major new gifts of art ranging from individual works to entire collections, transforming the art that the Dartmouth community can see on campus and building on the leading collection established over Dartmouth's first two-and-a-half centuries. In addition, a documentary film on early Dartmouth women is in the works.

Community Connections: In addition to campus- and community-wide celebrations, such as this football matchup against Princeton at Yankee Stadium, events were held for members of affinity groups and athletics team boosters. One such project is an oral history series called SpeakOut in which current students interview LGBTQIA+ alumni about their college experiences. Dartmouth also planned to convene international alumni and parents in the fall of 2019 through a series of Global Summits in planning for London, Hong Kong, Toronto, and Lima, Peru.

Dartmouth Undying is the commemorative book telling the Dartmouth story through a collection of essays and photographs edited by David Shribman '76, trustee emeritus and executive editor of Pittsburgh Post-Gazette, and writer Jim Collins '84, a past editor of Yankee Magazine. The book is now on sale through orange frazer.com.

Vengeance and Tedium Mothered the Invention of Football

In honor of college football's 150th season, a story on the first game in 1869

by Jay Greenberg

Fun was in short supply for the mid-19th century students at The College of New Jersey.

Founded in 1746 by New Light Presbyterians by ministers as a school to train them, professors at what would be renamed Princeton in 1896 frowned on levity. The strenuous curriculum had become more secular under the administration of President John Witherspoon (1768-94) but well into the next century more than 50 percent of the students remained Presbyterian, and still almost thirty percent were students of theology. All were men, and a rural location for the school, plus economic hardships that had engulfed the country during a Civil War, combined for a grim campus existence into the 1860s.

"There was none of the social life of the city to relieve the monotony of study," wrote Frank Presbrey in Athletics at Princeton, published in 1901. "The wealthier students would saddle horses and ... gallop over the hills, often to some mansion in the neighborhood, where a glimpse of some life outside the gloom sent the boy back to the books with vitality."

For students of lesser means, walking was practically the only recreation, save for attending regular orations at Presbyterian churches in the town. Even sleigh riding was forbidden by the administrators. Boys being boys at an all-boys school, they would break the tedium by smoking, drinking and inevitably even brawling. Thus the introduction of a ball to outdoor activities added a viable objective to them, better than the fist, even though the faculty judged both outlets for aggression frivolous. In the 1820s students had begun to engage in something called "balldown" on a field next to Nassau Hall, the participants assigned sides alphabetically.

The end of the war, which came in 1865, apparently lightened the mood to a degree. "A new generation of students entered Princeton with stronger passions and less self-control, perhaps because they were children of the war or because Southern planters were sending their sons to Princeton for a glimpse of the world," wrote Presbrey. In the North, prosperity had returned with the peace and soldiers enrolling in university felt their service and years of hardships had earned them the right to be treated as the adults that they were.

Or, perhaps it was just plain, timeless boredom that brought the students to Cannon Green following the 5 p.m. nightly prayers, to kick around beef bladders (usually four of them) in a leather covering.

"Everyone who chose to play, dozens sometimes, joined in during the wanting winter night," quoted Presbrey from the Nassau Literary Magazine, the monthly forerunner of the Daily Princetonian. "The goals were East and West College. The side who kicked to the wall won."

Sports go back at least to the ancient Greek Olympics. What became soccer was brought to England by the Romans. Formal rules for a game with goals and a ball that permitted carrying it were laid out in Rugby, Warwickshire England in the 1840s.

The game evolving in America, however, allowed for little-to-no touching of the ball with the hands. By 1858 there were rules, not of the already established Rugby or Association Football, but a kicking game, no carrying allowed. Other than that one stipulation, however, the rules being employed at Princeton and other American colleges were as “elastic as the ball,” according to Presbrey.

“Sometimes the ball would be placed in the middle of the ground, but the more common method being to throw it up in the air, starting a free-for all,” he wrote.

Whatever this game was called, it wasn’t the first athletic contests on campuses. Harvard and Yale organized their first crews in the 1840s, and then met for what was believed to be the first intercollegiate competition of any kind on New Hampshire’s Lake Winnepesaukee in 1852. Within a few years, Princeton, Dartmouth and Brown also were competing in what became the Rowing Association of American Colleges.

A cricket club at Princeton dated to 1857. Baseball, which evolved in New York City and its environs from the British game of rounders, was called “town ball” or “round ball” until formal rules were drawn up by Alexander Cartwright and William Wheaton of the Gotham Base Ball Club in New York in 1837. In 1858, when freshmen L.W. Midge, H.S. Butler and H. Sampson, all from Brooklyn, joined the freshman class at Princeton, they brought their baseball equipment with them. Their enthusiasm, according to Presbrey, spread on campus to the Princeton Theological Seminary, where a team was organized to play against one representing the university.

In 1862, the Nassau Baseball Club played two formal games against the Stars of New Brunswick, winning both. In 1864, Princeton’s first intercollegiate contest in baseball was a win over Williams. And in 1868, Princeton played games out of state for the first time, traveling to compete against Harvard, Yale and Williams. That same year, President James McCosh designated funds to build a gymnasium on campus and showed his approval for athletics by attending a baseball game between the Princeton club and the Athletics of Philadelphia.

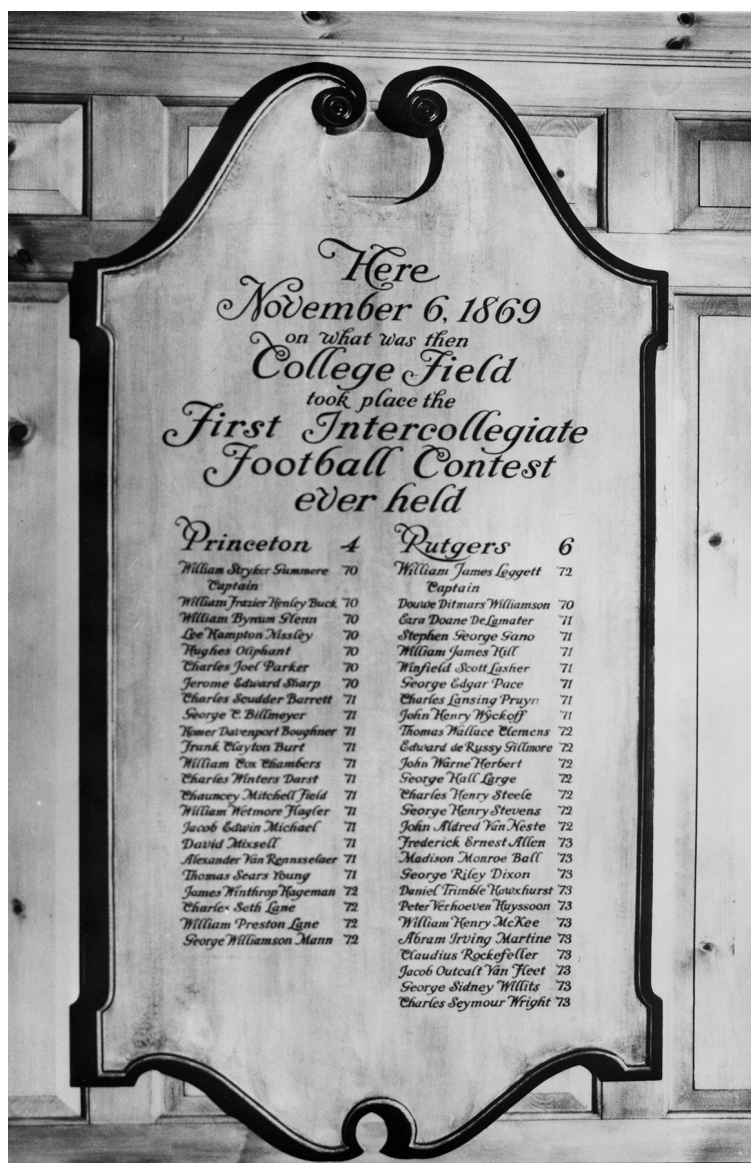

In the meantime, a rounder, livelier, rubber ball had enhanced the athleticism being displayed in the kicking — and assaulting — game being played on the Green. When some players began to reach the wall with the ball, such attempts were banned, leaving the hardest kicks mostly to the shins. Observers thought the sport even rougher than rugby, but the kicking game continued to grow supporters. In deference to Indian summers, students waited until “the weather grew cooler” to play. But the contests pitted mostly graduating class against class until in 1867, a team to represent the college was picked to play the Princeton Seminary on the Green and won, five goals to two.

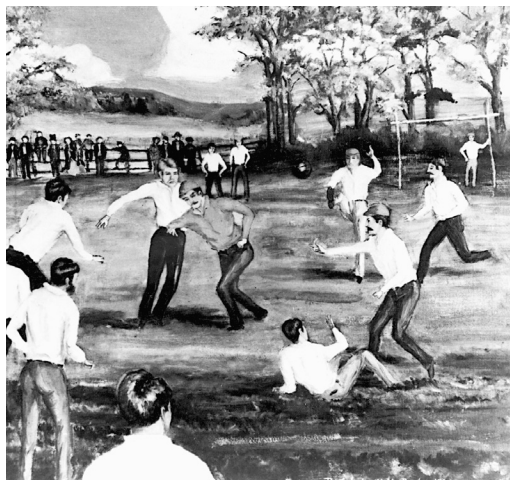

It was only a matter of time until a rivalry with nearby Rutgers extended beyond baseball, particularly after a Princeton nine had routed a Rutgers eight — no explanation for the missing player — 40-2 in 1866. Citing examinations, Princeton refused to grant a rematch, a festering sore on the New Brunswick campus.

According to Jay Dunn’s The Tigers of Princeton, published in 1977, Rutgers was enduring an additional indignity besides the baseball debacle. Nassau students had long bragged of a prank theft from the Rutgers campus of a treasured British Revolutionary War era cannon, even though that mission was delayed in completion — the wagon carrying the gun having broken down on the side of road. It took three years for the cannon to be rescued by Princeton students, who planted it, muzzle down, on the courtyard that came to be known as Cannon Green.

But apparently the indignity stemming from the baseball rout of two years previous was more the impetus for captain William J. Leggett organizing a Rutgers football team to compete against Princeton in a three-match series, the first and third games to be played at New Brunswick. William S. Gummere ’70, a student leader who was a reserve outfielder on Princeton’s baseball team, was chosen its first football captain to meet the Rutgers challenge.

There was a hint of snow in the air when the Rutgers team gathered at the New Brunswick station at 10 a.m. on Nov. 6, 1869 to amicably greet the train loaded with the Artist rendering of the first college football game.

College of New Jersey team and its student supporters. While the visitors strolled around town and lunched, the captains met to set the rules.

According to Mark Bernstein's Football, The Ivy League Origins of an American Obsession, published in 2001, Leggett suggested using the rules of the London Football Association and Gummere agreed quickly. The one major difference in the game being played on each of the New Jersey campuses was that at Princeton, a player who caught the ball on the fly or first bounce was entitled to an unhindered "free kick." Rutgers had no such rule, so it was agreed that it be employed only in the middle game of the three, to be played at Princeton. For the first-ever intercollegiate football game that day, the only major deviation between this sport and the one that would evolve as soccer was that the ball could be batted with a hand, although never carried, as in rugby.

College Field at Rutgers was 225 feet wide, with goals 24 feet wide. There were 25 players per side, two stationed as final defenders termed "captains of the enemy's goal." Twelve were employed at specific places on the field and the others were "bulldozers," told to follow the ball.

Six goals would be required to win the game, unless darkness fell first. There was no video review of scores (just making sure you're still paying attention here). Two pre-game coin flips were held, one to determine the first offensive opportunity, the other a choice of goals, which would switch after each score. Six officials would preside, although the manner of the game was so ungentlemanly, it is not clear exactly over what.

Spectators, gathered on the wooden fence around the field in anticipation of the 3 p.m. start, entertained themselves with college songs. Princeton supporters adopted orange as the color of the class of 1869 by George K. Ward '69 after William of Orange, Prince of Nassau, but was not yet representative of the entire student body. They performed a "Tiger cheer" of increasing cadence which had been learned from a Union regiment passing through Princeton during the war. Eventually that would evolve into the locomotive cheer.

According to The Targum, Rutgers' student newspaper, the Princeton players "grimly" stripped off their coats and hats, rolled up their sleeves and took the field with no semblance of uniform. The Rutgers players wore scarlet turbans.

Princeton won the toss to get the first "mount" and was repelled by Rutgers who countered to drive home the first score. Gummere told Jacob E. Michael, known to his Princeton teammates as "Big Mike," to assert his power, and he took to plowing through the mass of smaller Rutgers players and tied the score, 1-1.

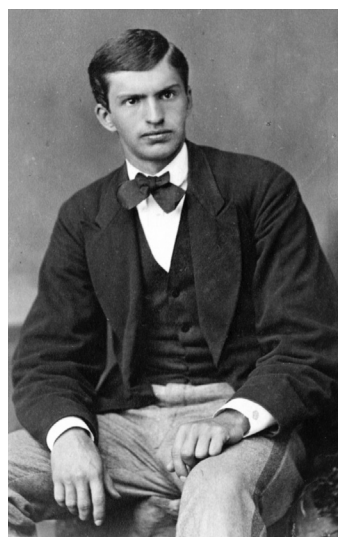

Later Big Mike and a Rutgers player crashed into the fence sending spectators crashing to the ground. According to the Targum, Rutgers won the third, sixth and ninth rounds. Princeton, getting the ball into the air more than its opponent, took the second, fourth and seventh — that one helped by a Rutgers player becoming confused and kicking the ball the wrong way. But Rutgers went back to a ground attack, broke a 4-4 tie and won 6-4.

Princeton "had the most muscle but didn't kick very well and wanted (for) organization," summarized the Targum reporter. "They evidently did not like to kick the ball on the ground. Our men, through comparatively weak, ran well and kicked well throughout, for which captain Leggett '72 deserves great praise."

The participants from both sides shared an evening meal at a New Brunswick hotel before the Princeton players took the train home. In the rematch a week later, Princeton, on its own turf and able to use its own rules, used short free kicks to rout the visitors 8-0 (no explanation for the expansion of the game by two more goals) but then sportingly agreed to play two more "innings" Rutgers style — minus the free kicks. Rutgers won those.

As the professors at both schools decided athletic foolishness was taking away from studies, the rubber match never was played. But the two schools met again the following year at Princeton, Old Nassau winning 6-2. Ongoing disapproval by the faculty limited the Princeton men in 1871 to games only against the Seminary, with no records surviving of the result. But by then, Rutgers students had grown the game by introducing it to Columbia and another Rutgers challenge of Princeton in 1872 was repelled by Princeton, 4-1. Having suffered no apparent loss from these athletic wastes of brainpower, Gummere studied law and eventually became Chief Justice of the New Jersey Supreme Court. Apparently this new foolishness of football did not erode the soul but could even strengthen it. Colleges were uncomfortable with the violence, but were unable to squelch the spectator appeal of these rough and tumble struggles for bragging rights and soon learned to make money off of them. Born was an autumn mania.

Player Safety at the Root of Dartmouth Innovations

by Bruce Wood

It's hardly a secret that football coaches are notoriously risk averse, which only makes what Buddy Teevens had decided to do after five disappointing years back at his alma mater that much more surprising.

The Dartmouth football coach, who would go on to make headlines by eliminating all tackling in practice, was taking the first step in that direction by limiting full contact to just the goal line and short-yardage situations.

"We were 0-10 and 2-8 the preceding two years," Teevens said one day this fall after another non-tackling practice. "We had a new school president and a new athletic director, and I was at the end of my contract.

"It probably wasn't the smartest career move to make at that point. But I really felt that it was in the best interests of our players and our program, and that we could have success and be productive eliminating a lot of the contact at practice."

A former Dartmouth quarterback, Buddy Teevens was the youngest coach in the nation when he took over the Maine program in 1985 at the ripe old age of 28. Like a lot of coaches who came before and would come after him, he knew only one way to get a team ready.

"You saw how it was done when you were a player," he said, "and you did what you knew. That's how you learned the coaching profession."

And so Teevens would have his team do the infamous Oklahoma Drill, the bull-in-the-ring and the like.

"I was one of those guys years ago," he said. "I would say we were going to be tougher than everybody else. And it was kind of a war of attrition."

It was during a short stint on Steve Spurrier's staff at Florida that the light started to come on.

"I had just joined them from the University of Illinois and I was really grinding," Teevens recalled. "Coach brought me in and said, 'They know how to play. Your job is to get them to game day.' Essentially he was telling me to back off."

After several seasons with the Ball Coach, Teevens was hired to run the show at Stanford, where he heard a similar message from another of the game's legendary figures, Bill Walsh.

"He was a brilliant man who way back when started practicing with just helmets," said Teevens. "I'll always remember what he told me: 'Take care of your players.'"

It was a few years after returning to Dartmouth in 2005 when Teevens was in St. Louis for an alumni event that a visit to one of the Rams' OTA's — Organized Team Activities — convinced him the day had finally come to make a radical change.

"This was right about the time all the concussion conversation was really picking up in the NFL," Teevens said. "I was talking with (then Rams' coach) Jeff Fisher and he told me they don't tackle anymore. I knew they didn't tackle in season but he told me they weren't tackling at all. He said, ‘My feeling at this stage in their career is they know how to hit and how to take a hit.’

“That really resonated with me.”

The decision to eliminate tackling in practice was not a democratic process at Dartmouth.

“I literally didn’t talk to my staff about it,” Teevens said. “I knew it was going to be a controversial decision and I didn’t want to give them the opportunity to try to talk me out of it.”

Don Dobes, the Big Green’s highly regarded defensive coordinator, got his coaching start alongside Teevens as a graduate assistant at DePauw in the 1979-80 season. Dobes, who joined Teevens at Dartmouth in 2010, actually took the announcement in stride. He’d seen the Big Green go 6-4 in his first season tackling on an extremely limited basis, and replacing all tackling with “thud” was the logical next step.

“When I first got here, we eliminated tackling everywhere except short yardage and goal line,” he said recently. “So in my mind the only real change was in those situations, where I thought it would be hard to simulate what it’s like to try to stop somebody. That was my biggest concern. How would it affect our performance in those two areas?”

“Once we talked about it and I saw where Buddy was coming from, I became a big proponent of it, in part because I had had smaller linebackers that were really good if they were healthy on game day, but not so good if you got them hurt or banged up during the week.”

According to Teevens, injuries dropped by 80 percent in the first year of full no-tackle practice. Concussions dropped 58 percent a year later. Perhaps surprisingly at the time, missed tackles dropped by one half.

Will McNamara was one of Dobes’ prized linebackers. He was on his way to becoming an all-state selection at Chicago’s St. Rita High School when Teevens stopped by on a recruiting trip.

While he liked what Teevens had to say about Dartmouth and its focus on success on the field and off, McNamara was skeptical at best about the non-tackling piece.

“When you grow up on the South Side, it’s all about who is the biggest hitter,” he said. “You think we’re not going to be tough unless we hit. We’re not going to be ready to beat anybody or tackle anybody unless we’re hitting each other as hard as we can, all the way to the ground. To hear someone say you’re not going to hit each other, not going to bring each other to the ground in practice, seemed crazy.

“I can’t remember my exact response when I heard that. I mean, it was one of pure shock. It’s something I had never heard before and I didn’t believe one bit of it.”

Still, the Dartmouth offer was too appealing to turn down.

Four years later McNamara was a two-time unanimous All-Ivy League selection, a finalist for the Bushnell Cup as the top defensive player in the Ivy League and a captain of the Big Green’s first Ivy League championship team since 1996. All without once tackling a teammate.

If he wasn’t entirely convinced about the benefits of not tackling in practice at the start of his college career, McNamara soon became a true believer.

“It was a situation where I felt like I was being truly invested in, and being taken care of,” he said. “I thought I was a pretty good player hitting every day in high school, and if I could not hit during the week I’d really be ready to go on Saturday. It would feel great.

“You watch Dartmouth play and guys fly around and are able to put their bodies on the line because they were taken care of during the week. They are fully healthy and ready to execute the game plan. That’s what Coach T said it would be like, and that’s the way it was for all four years.”

Teevens laughed this fall recalling his exit interview with McNamara, one of the first players he ever told about the no-tackling piece in the recruiting process.

"I asked him, 'Do you remember when I was at your house and asked you what you thought about not tackling?' " the coach said. "He said, 'We all thought it was BS, but I was fresher for Dartmouth games than I ever was for a game in high school.' "

So how does it work? How has a team that only tackles on game days, lead the nation in scoring defense in 2015, finish second last year and lead the country again this fall?

It's like the old joke about the tourist asking how to get to Carnegie Hall. Practice, practice, practice.

Watch Dartmouth during the week and the players will rotate from station to station working on tackling — not each other — by using sleds, dummies, bags, partners and pads, and ending up not on the turf but on heavily cushioned landing pads. The specialized drills are a result of Teevens, Dobes and the Big Green coaches going into their individual video bunkers and essentially developing their own encyclopedia of tackling.

"We broke down how different players tackle," Teevens offered. "Cover corners generally tackle mid-to-low. They are smaller guys. Big guys tackle mid-to-high. Linebackers tackle all three levels. So we identified that and teach it. It might be, I want a low, left shoulder tackle. I want a high, right pectoral tackle. When you can articulate it like that, it makes guys think a little bit more.

"We talk about a mid-line, belt-line tackle," Teevens continued, warming to the subject. "For a lot of people, it's 'eyes to the thighs' or something like that. But the break point of the human body is your waist. It doesn't move and it's the softest part of your body. So if I can put my shoulder on your break point, you are going down."

Listen to McNamara and it is clear Dartmouth players become true students of the art of tackling.

"We had a real hyper-focus on the details," said McNamara. "OK, are we reading the hips? Are we shuffling? Are we balanced with every step? Where are our eyes located? When we strike, are we striking firm and strong? Are we wrapping and rolling?"

"Every single station is focused on each stage of the tackle, and making sure that we are really hyper-focused on the little things that help us make big open-field tackles in games."

While McNamara was quickly won over by the benefits of not tackling, it took a little longer for some other people.

"I got a letter from an alum when this was first publicized," Teevens said with a laugh. "It said, 'I don't know what the big deal is. You guys haven't tackled anybody since you got here.' "

The result? The first year after eliminating tackling in practice, Dartmouth's missed tackles were cut roughly in half as the Big Green finished 6-4, its first winning season in 13 years.

The rest is history. The only Ivy League team not to tackle to the ground in the spring or in the preseason has gone 66-29 (.695) since Teevens rolled the dice and first cut down tackling in 2010, and then eliminated it totally. At the midpoint of this season, the Big Green were 22-3 in its last 25 contests.

"Now we average just five to seven missed tackles a game," said Teevens. "That's a result of all the time we spend practicing our tackling."

Senior corner Isiah Swann led the nation in interceptions last year but he's also as sure a tackler as there is on the Dartmouth team. The NFL prospect credits the time spent on the tackling circuit at practice.

"It really gets your form down," he said. "A lot of people might just dive at the ankles, right? But this teaches you to stay up, thud them up as we like to say, get your body on them and bring them down."

In addition to the role it has played in helping reduce broken bones and so-called "soft-tissue" injuries, the move away from tackling during the week has dramatically decreased the incidence of concussions among Dartmouth players, just as they did when the NFL went away from tackling in practice.

In McNamara's senior season Dartmouth did not have a single concussion on the defense he headed up. Nor was there one the next spring.

With awareness of CTE (Chronic Traumatic Encephalopathy) and the dangers of concussions and repeated subconcussive hits growing, Dartmouth's elimination of tackling during the week came to be seen as more than helping the players be healthy on game day. It became about helping them be healthy long after their playing days were over.

"It's a fundamental belief that banging your head repeatedly for an extended period of time isn't a good thing," said Teevens. "So we need to reduce that in our world. When it comes to tackling in practice, the model I use is the NFL. They have 32 teams playing a 16-week season and they have single-digit concussions in practice. Why can't the college game do that?"

Teevens obviously believes it can, which is why he convinced the Ivy League to eliminate in-season tackling the way the NFL has. He even pushed to have the entire league join Dartmouth in prohibiting tackling during spring practice and the preseason. His was the only vote in favor of a full ban, despite studies that show 60 percent of subconcussive hits happen in practice. He's hopeful that in time, more coaches and leagues will join the movement.

The 2015 movie Concussion, the discovery that former players like Mike Webster and Junior Seau had suffered from CTE, and stories on television, in newspapers and magazines, and on the Internet put the game Buddy Teevens loves in a harsh spotlight and gave new importance to what he had started at Dartmouth.

It's why he has intensified his push to make the game safer, even producing a 20-minute YouTube video on practicing tackling without taking players to the ground titled, "The Dartmouth Way," and making it freely available to everyone.

It's why he has welcomed equipment maker Riddell and technology firm Simbex to his practices to study subconcussive hits identified by helmet sensors. It's why he's outfitted his players with state-of-the-art helmets from Riddell and Vicis. It's why he was one of the beta programs for the STRIVR virtual reality system, allowing players to be in the middle of the action virtually instead of physically, thereby reducing the risk of injury.

It's why he brought in the Catapult GPS tracking system so that his players' workloads could be monitored to keep them safe and why he has introduced Gamebreaker soft-shell pads for walkthroughs.

It's why he invited women who coach the game to spend time at his practices and even join his staff because, as he said, "If they are going to coach they should coach the game as safely as possible."

While Teevens was one of the pioneers of tackle-free practice in the college ranks, he didn't become one of the most visible faces in the movement until someone else came along. That would be a 5-foot-11, 190-pounder who can finish the 40-yard dash in 4.8 seconds and, quite literally, spin on a dime.

It is called the Mobile Virtual Player, the MVP for short, and it is a remote tackling dummy. Borne of Teevens' fertile mind in 2013, it was developed at Dartmouth's Thayer School of Engineering and debuted to instant acclaim in 2015.

The MVP, with Teevens in tow, would appear on "The Late Show with Stephen Colbert," on local and national news reports, in the Boston Globe, New York Times and Washington Post, among others, and on ESPN, the BBC, 60 Minutes Sports and too many outlets to list.

The MVP would win the $50,000 first prize in the NFL's 2017 1st & Future Competition and be shown, along with Teevens, on commercials about safety in football aired by the NFL during Monday Night Football games and even the Super Bowl. The "smart" dummy has been purchased by NFL teams, by scores of colleges big and small, and by high school teams. Its acceptance has led to the development of a smaller, less expensive model to help make the youth game safer.

Since eliminating live tackling, Teevens has become a popular speaker with Practice Like Pros, a group that advocates less contact during the week and greater awareness of the dangers of subconcussive hits.

Last spring, Teevens was invited to travel to Atlanta to take part in an NFL roundtable regarding player safety featuring offensive line and defensive line coaches from the league as well as its chief medical officer. And this fall, the MVP was at his side when he made a presentation about football safety at the famed Monday Morning Quarterback Club in Birmingham, Alabama.

It was back in May of 2016 that Teevens traveled to Washington, D.C., to speak before a U.S. House of Representatives subcommittee on oversight and investigations hearing on concussions in youth sports. His warning before the legislators — and each time he speaks to another group — continues to echo true across the football landscape.

"If we don't change the way that we coach the game," he said, "we won't have a game to coach."

Nearly a decade after doing their part, Teevens, his staff, a certain smart dummy and his players are doing their part to make sure they do.

DARTMOUTH'S ALL-TIME LETTER WINNERS

Since 1881, a total of 2,583 Dartmouth students (including some women who have been team managers in recent years) have been awarded the block "D" for their part in perpetuating Dartmouth's winning football tradition.

Included in this listing are 13 men who were members of Dartmouth's first football team in 1880. While that team did not play an outside game against an intercollegiate opponent (the team was prohibited from playing off campus), letters were awarded.

Dartmouth's first team to play an intercollegiate opponent was the 1881 squad that played Amherst twice, winning on the Green in Hanover and tying a rematch (abbreviated by a snowstorm) at Springfield, Mass.

An asterisk (*) appears beside the year that a player was a captain. Among the players who have been captains are nine men who were captains of two teams: Frank Lakeman 1892, Walter McCornack 1897, John Glaze 1908, Jim Robertson 1920, Caleb Moore 2000, Clayton Smith 2005, Garrett Waggoner 2013, Bronson Green 2014 and Kyran McKinney-Crudden 2018.

In 2011, Tim McManus 2011 — who did not letter as a captain in 2009 due to an injury — became the third player to captain the Big Green in at least three seasons. The other two are Clarence Howland 1884 and Bill Odlin 1890, who were four-time captains. Howland was captain and coach of the first Dartmouth teams from 1880-83. Odlin was captain from 1886-89. Until 1892, the captain was also the coach of Dartmouth football.

Team managers are identified by an (M) beside their names.

Beside some names will appear the initials "DMC." These players were enrolled at Dartmouth more than a century ago as members of the "Dartmouth Marine Corps," a device used prior to 1900 to provide intercollegiate eligibility for players from the Hanover area. Rules of eligibility have become more defined since those early days.

With the advent of freshman eligibility in recent years, four-year letterwinners are no longer uncommon. However, there have been two five-year letterwinners at Dartmouth: Charles Boyle 1901 lettered from 1896-1900 and Charles Little 1891 (DMC 1896) lettered from 1888-90 and again in 1893-94.

There are also nearly 40 letterwinners who represented Dartmouth on the gridiron while on campus through the V-12 Program during World War II. These players have "USMC" or "USN" following their names, denoting their service in the U.S. Marine Corps or the U.S. Navy. Many went on to graduate from Dartmouth.

DON McKINNON

COACH BOB BLACKMAN'S FIRST DARTMOUTH ALL-AMERICAN

AUGUST 28, 1941 — JANUARY 25, 2015

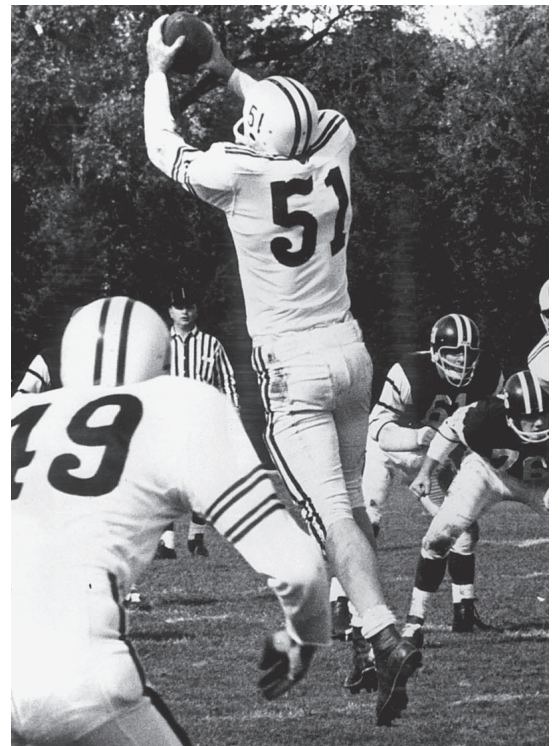

CLASS of 1963

- Donald B. McKinnon was the All-American center and linebacker on Dartmouth's undefeated and untied (9-0) 1962 football team
- Golden Trophy winner as nation's top Catholic collegiate football player that year
- Bulger Lowe Award as New England's best college player in 1962 as well
- Played in the Coach's All-American football game in 1963
- Drafted by both the New York Giants in the NFL and the Boston Patriots of the then AFL

Don was a starting linebacker for the Patriots until a broken hip shortened his career. He moved on to a career on Wall Street, and was a financial advisor to many of his teammates. Don was married and had two sons, Donald, Jr. and Andrew.

As he later fought a lengthy cancer battle he divided his time between northern California and Block Island and was supported in his fight by family, classmates, teammates and friends who hope others will remember and recognize this Dartmouth standout scholar-athlete.
