

FAYETTEVILLE STATE

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL HISTORY 1940-2020

Athletics at Fayetteville State University began shortly after the school moved to its present location in 1924 when it was opened as the State Colored Normal School (1877-1924). The school became a member of the North Carolina Athletic Conference (NCAC) in 1924 but complete records for that period are not available. There is pictorial evidence of teams during this period. There is also evidence of a baseball club in 1912 and a women's basketball club in 1916. It is not clear where these clubs played and who they participated against.

In the earlier years, the most popular sports were baseball and basketball amongst the male population while basketball was the sport for women. The students were the moving force behind athletics at this time and athletic associations were organized in the same manner as other organizations/clubs on campus. Just as other activities had faculty advisors so did the athletic clubs. The students organized and managed their operations. The crowning glory for Fayetteville State University was the construction of Lilly Gymnasium in 1938. The site was considered one of the finest sports facilities of its time. Not only was it the home of college basketball tournaments, but it was also the site of the National Association of High School (NASHS) basketball tournaments. The tournaments were held at Lilly Gym for three consecutive years. However, it was moved because rules at that time prohibited the tournament being held at a single site for more than three consecutive years.

Fayetteville State University became a member of the NCAC (1924-1939), the governing body for all athletic events. Teams were fielded in baseball and football for men and tennis for women with basketball added a short time later. The athletic complex was four acres with a nine-foot fence and an impressive grandstand. The football complex was called Smith Stadium in 1962. It was later renamed Bronco Stadium. It was renamed again in 1993 to Luther "Nick" Jeralds Stadium. It should be noted that many of these games, depending on the location of the teams, were played against high school, YMCA teams and black military units because many black schools still maintain grade and secondary schools on their campuses. Good players from high schools were permitted to play on college teams.

In 1940 Fayetteville State University joined the Eastern Intercollegiate Athletic Association (EIAC) (1940-1954), a conference which was made up of schools with small male populations. The conference members were Elizabeth City State College, Fayetteville State Teacher College, Friendship College, Livingstone College, Morris College, Virginia State College – Norfolk Campus (now Norfolk State University) and Storer College.

From 1949 through 1952 the Broncettes' (the women's basketball team nickname) posted impressive records of 13-3 (1949), 6-6 (1950), 9-1 (1951), 1952 (15-1) and 1953 (16-2). The women's program was a main stay until it was discontinued in 1960. It was reinstated in 1972.

The 1954 athletic season saw Fayetteville State University become a member of the Central Intercollegiate Athletic Association (CIAA). Another change affecting athletics at the institution was the passage of Title IX on June 23, 1972, requiring all colleges and university that received federal funding provides equal sports activities for its female population. The 70's also saw Fayetteville State reach the crowning glory in the CIAA. In 1973, Tom Reeves guided the Broncos to the CIAA Tournament Championship after a runner-up finish in 1972.

The Lady Broncos under the mentorship of Maceo Smith Esquilene won the 1979 championship. This was her first and last year of coaching basketball. Prior to stepping as coach of the Lady Broncos in 1977, Laurette Taylor guided the team to the CIAA finals in 1974. In 1975, the Lady Broncos won the consolation game of the tournament and in 1975-76 they were the tournament runners-up. After claiming a second runners-up title in 1999, FSU won the Championship game in 2001 and again in 2010. Just prior to the Covid 19 pandemic, Fayetteville State captured the 2020 CIAA crown before all sporting events were shut down for a year.

Under Interim Head Coach Tyreece Brown, Fayetteville State went through the regular season with two losses to secure the program's fifth conference title and a 27-2 record heading into the Atlantic Region Tournament.
