PRESEASON NOTES

- Montana had a banner season in 2018, posting 10 victories, its highest win total since 2013. The Grizzlies qualified for the Big Sky tournament for the first time since 2014.
- Montana won seven Big Sky matches in 2018. The Grizzlies won just five conference matches in 2016 and 2017 combined.
- Despite playing two top-30 teams, Montana went 5-7 at home in 2018, winning five consecutive home matches from Sept. 1-Oct. 11.
- The Grizzlies averaged nearly 600 fans per home match in 2018, its largest figure in 23 seasons.
- After returning 100 percent of their starts and more than 95 percent of their kills, assists, blocks and total points from 2017 to 2018, the Grizzlies return less production in 2019, including 54 percent of their digs, 43 percent of their aces, 35 percent of their blocks and 16 percent of their kills.
- While Montana lost plenty of talent from last fall, returning is starting setter Ashley Watkins, who ranks sixth in school history with more than 2,500 career assists.
- Montana also returns seniors Missy Huddleston (top returning attacker, second for digs) and Janna Grimsrud (0.90 blocks-per-set average in limited time).
- Sarina Moreno started at libero for the final 27 matches, totaling 429 digs (4.25 per set), which ranks 11th in school history and most ever by a freshman.
- Montana added six freshmen to its roster, with several expected to compete for starting positions in 2019. Additionally, Elsa Godwin, Kelsey Nestegard and Casey Stites are all back after redshirting in 2018.
- Montana ranked last or second-to-last in the Big Sky Conference in every statistical category before Allison Lawrence took over as head coach prior to the 2017 season. In two seasons since, the Grizzlies have risen by at least three spots in each category, and have increased their assists, kills, blocks and digs by roughly 100 spots apiece in the national rankings.
