LIONS' STADIUM

Now in its fourteenth year of operation, Lions' Stadium has provided area fans with top-caliber athletic competition in a variety of sports.

Opened during the fall of 1984, it is not only home to the TCNJ men's soccer team, but also the Lions' women's soccer team, the football team, and the field hockey and women's lacrosse teams. In addition, Lions' Stadium has been host to six NCAA Division III field hockey championships, the 1990 Eastern Regional Football Championships, and the 1991 and 1995 NCAA Division I and III Women's Lacrosse Championships and the 1994 NCAA Division III Men's Soccer Final Four. In addition to a number of regional and early-round NCAA contests, Lions' Stadium also hosts several special events each year, most notably the New Jersey Special Olympics and the 1994 First Fidelity High School Football All-Star Game, as well as the 1997 First Union North-South All-Star Football Game and the Inaugural Sunshine Classic.

The focal point of the arena, which can hold 5,000 spectators, is the artificial surface, designed by AstroTurf Industries, Inc., of Dalton, Georgia. The first of its kind constructed in the United States, the sports field consists of a vertical drainage system which prevents the duck pond effect usually associated with other artificial surfaces during rainstorms. The "turf" was introduced in Europe approximately five years before the TSC ground-breaking ceremony of July 19, 1983.

The lighted field, which also serves the general campus community as a center for intramural activity, was complemented last in 1988 with the completion of a two-level press box, grandstand, concession stand, and restroom facilities. At the forefront of this latest addition is a carpeted, 750-square foot press room.

The press box, which occupies the lower level of the two-level facility, includes a working press room of some 600-square feet, in addition to a television booth and officials booth. The second level includes a 450-square foot camera deck, TCNJ spotter booth, and sky box. The entire facility is heated and includes private restrooms on each level.
