DIVERSITY EQUITY & INCLUSION (DEI) INITIATIVES

One of the initiatives that SAAC created this year was DEI Fridays. Every Friday throughout the semester student-athlete and coaches that encompass underrepresented identities (i.e., sexual orientation, race, ethnicity, gender, etc.) were highlighted. The following are thoughts from Green Wave student athletes on these subjects:

CRYSTAL SINGH | BOWLING

"What’s one thing you would like others to know/learn about your identity (ies)?"

By Black, I specifically mean Black Caribbean. Many just assume I’m mixed but don’t ask where my skin color comes from. I’m very proud to be Trinidadian because everything from the music to the people is unapologetically authentic.

IAN VALDEZ | MEN’S CROSS COUNTRY/TRACK & FIELD

"Who’s someone you look up to that promotes inclusion and effects change? Please explain why."

Someone I look up to that promotes inclusion and change is Lebron James. He is such a good role model and I have been looking up to him since I was young because he is good at basketball, but now I can realize that he stands for things bigger than himself and bigger than basketball, like racial equality and promotion of education.

JAMIE POLAKOFF | MEN’S CROSS COUNTRY/TRACK & FIELD

"What’s one thing you would like others to know/learn about your identity (ies)?"

As a Japanese American, I think it’s important to understand the nuances of the Asian American identity. There are so many different cultures and national heritages within that umbrella and everyone’s experience is unique. While there are many shared aspects and the Asian American experience is definitely a collective one, I also think it’s important to recognize the individuality and beauty of all the different cultures within the Asian American identity.

AAC Academic Consortium

SAAC Co-President Sion James, SAAC Vice President and DEI Chair Sierra Cheatman, and Faculty Athletics Representative Michele Adams attended the AAC Academic Consortium. This consortium focused on research and programming related to student well-being, with a particular focus on issues related to student-athlete well-being.

SAAC Co-President Sion James, Vice President and DEI Chair Sierra Cheatman, and Faculty Athletics Representative Michele Adams attended the AAC Academic Consortium.
The Tulane Athletics Behavioral Health Team partnered with the Tulane Athletic Department, SAAC and the AAC to encourage discussion and action in mental health awareness conversations. Powerful Minds Week, a mental health awareness initiative led by the student-athletes, was designed to reduce the stigma surrounding mental health and encourage people to use mental-health services. Other events such as Destress Fest, were an opportunity for student athletes to relax and unwind during finals week. In addition, each class of student-athletes attended and participated in mental health education sessions to increase their knowledge of mental health signs and symptoms, discuss coping strategies, and learn about mental health resources on campus. These sessions included Mental Health 101 for Freshman, Tulane Transition Training for Seniors, and the Mental Health & Leadership Academy for Sophomores.
