JOHN BUNTING • HEAD COACH
4TH YEAR AT NORTH CAROLINA
UNC '72

Throughout a season in which many outside observers gave up on the Tar Heel football team, one man made sure his players never did. John Bunting was many things during his fourth season at North Carolina. He was stern, determined, resolute, enthusiastic and diligent. But perhaps Bunting's most important quality this season was patience.

He saw a team that was talented and would get better as the season progressed. He saw a team that was playing well at times against the nation's No. 2-rated schedule. And he saw a group of seniors that were as resilient as any group he had ever coached.

"I've been with these seniors," says Bunting. "I've lived through their sorrow and despair in the 2002 and 2003 season. This team is the greatest combination of talent and leadership we've had here, and the emphasis is on the leadership. These kids made a huge commitment starting with the meeting after the Duke game last year. Jason Brown said, `I don't want to spend Christmas with my family, I want to spend it with this family.'"

Brown will get his wish as the Tar Heels are in a bowl game for the second time under Bunting and the 24th time in school history.

After starting the season with a hard-fought victory over Division I-AA William & Mary, followed by a blowout loss to Virginia, Carolina seemed likely to produced a repeat of the previous two seasons in which the Tar Heels combined to win just five games.

An exciting victory over Georgia Tech, followed by back-to-back losses to Louisville and Florida State had the Tar Heels at 2-3 overall with arch rival NC State coming to town.

In a memorable game that was decided on the last play of the game, Carolina twice stopped T.A. McLendon at the goal line, forcing a fumble on the second play and recovering the ball with just seconds remaining.

As quickly as the momentum swung in the Tar Heels direction, it disappeared with a 30-point loss at Utah the next week as the Tar Heels gave up over 600 yards and came back to Chapel Hill with several injuries.

Battered and bruised, Bunting gave an emotional speech following the Utah game, in which he challenged his players. He never stopped believing in his team, his staff and his philosophy and what followed on October 30 was a day most Tar Heel fans will never forget. A double-digit underdog, Carolina upset No. 4 Miami on a 42-yard field goal as time expired, setting off one of the wildest post-game celebrations in school history. The win was Carolina's first ever over a top five team and suddenly the Tar Heels were just two wins shy of bowl eligibility.

Carolina then lost by just three points to eventual ACC champion Virginia Tech, but bounced back yet again to win road games at Wake Forest and Duke, securing a postseason bowl bid.

"We're a team that showed tremendous resilience and a tremendous amount of togetherness to keep working and striving week after week," says Bunting.

Predicted to finish 10th in the newly expanded 11-team ACC, Bunting and the Tar Heels ended the year tied for third with Miami and Virginia despite having just one first-team All-ACC player, center Jason Brown. In addition, Bunting accomplished a third place finish even though no Tar Heel defensive players were selected first- or second-team All-ACC.

The Continental Tire Bowl is Bunting's second as a head coach and fourth as a Tar Heel. He beat Auburn in the 2001 Peach Bowl, 16-10 to cap a season in which the Tar Heels won eight of their final 10 games to finish 8-5.

Bunting was an All-ACC linebacker for the Tar Heels during his 1969-71 playing career in Chapel Hill, leading the Tar Heels to back-to-back bowl games as a junior and senior. He was drafted in the 10th round by the Philadelphia Eagles and went on to start 119 of 133 games in an 11-year NFL career. In 1980, he helped the Eagles beat the Dallas Cowboys in the NFC Championship Game and played in Super Bowl XV against the Oakland Raiders.

Bunting's hiring by Chancellor James Moeser and Athletic Director Dick Baddour culminated a decades-long dream by Bunting, who set his sights on one day coaching at his alma mater shortly after leaving Chapel Hill in the spring of 1972. At each stop along the way—from Philadelphia to Glassboro to Kansas City to St. Louis to New Orleans—Bunting took with him a framed photograph of Kenan Stadium that hung in his locker or over his office desk for 30 years.

During his four years at Carolina, Bunting has seen both the highs and lows. He's seen big wins and some disappointing losses.

His 2001 Tar Heel football team finished 8-5. It won five straight games—including a memorable 41-9 shellacking of Florida State—was in contention for a BCS berth late in the year and finished the season with a victory over Auburn in the Peach Bowl.

His next two teams wheeled 180 degrees, going just 5-19 while battling injuries and attrition. The Tar Heels were 3-9 in 2002 and endured a late-season stretch when, with starting QB Darian Durant sidelined with a broken thumb, they scored only four touchdowns in four games and yielded 172 points over the same month.

Through the ups and the downs, Carolina's 32nd head coach has demonstrated a remarkable combination of resiliency, toughness, intelligence, passion and leadership. He's needed every skill in the book as the Tar Heels are trying to restore the program to the heights it enjoyed in the 1990s—including seven consecutive bowl berths and back-to-back Top 10 finishes in 1996-97.
