Utah advanced to the 1998 Final Four at the Alamodome in San Antonio, Texas. After upsetting No. 1 North Carolina in the semifinals, Utah faced Kentucky in the national championship game.

National Champions

1916 AAU Champions

The 1915-16 Ute hoop squad started out as a team unsure of itself, but after a victory over Brigham Young in Provo and two close wins over Utah State the team knew it was pretty good. Utah had not considered sending a team to Chicago for the AAU National Championships, but after the Utes beat the defending national champion Olympic Club of San Francisco, 46-26, a groundswell of support raised enough money to send the team to the Windy City in search of a national title. After drawing a first-night bye, the Utes faced a rematch with the Olympic Club. The results were the same the second time around as Utah took a 52-40 victory to move into the championship game against the Illinois Athletic Club.

The title game was close throughout, and with just seconds to go Illinois had a one-point lead and the ball out of bounds under the Ute basket. Utah coach Nelson H. Nordgren set up a tight defense, and on the inbound pass Ute forward Clyde Packer knocked the ball to the ground. Packer picked up the ball and with just a "second or two left" threw the ball in the basket to give Utah a 28-27 win and its first national championship.

1944 NCAA Champions

The Utes were invited to both the NIT and the NCAA Tournament at the end of the 1944 season, but chose the former. At the time, the NIT was a much better tournament financially, and the chance to play in New York's Madison Square Garden was something the Ute players, and especially coach Vadal Peterson, wanted to experience.

Kentucky was Utah's first opponent in the NIT and even though the young Utes played well, they couldn't overcome the experience of the Wildcats and fell 46-36. While the Utes were still seeing the sights of New York before heading home, Peterson received a phone call from the NCAA asking them to participate in their tournament as a late fill-in for Arkansas, which was involved in an automobile accident, making the team unable to play in the tournament. The Utes quickly accepted and headed to Kansas City, where they beat Missouri, 45-35, in the first round and Iowa State, 40-35, to advance to the championship game back in Madison Square Garden against Dartmouth.

The game was close throughout, with the lead changing hands six times in the last two minutes. At the end of regulation the two teams were tied at 36 and the game headed into overtime.

Arnie Ferrin, who scored 22 points that night, netted four points in the extra period. With the score tied at 40 with just three seconds left, Herb Wilkinson hit a one-hander from behind the free throw circle to give the Utes the win and the NCAA Championship. A few days later, Utah faced NIT winner St. John's in a Red Cross Benefit game in the Garden. Helped by a nine-point run in the second half, the Utes came away with a 43-36 victory.

Ferrin was the first freshman ever to be named MVP of the Final Four.

Head Coach Vadal Peterson (top row, left) led Utah to the NCAA Championship in 1944 and the first of two national titles in four seasons.

1947 NIT Champions

Three years after accepting an NIT invitation that turned into an NCAA Championship, the Utes were again invited to the prestigious New York tournament. This time, the Utes helped the state of Utah celebrate its centennial by coming away with the 1947 NIT Championship.

The Utes won the three games in the tournament by a total of seven points, beating Duquesne, 45-44, West Virginia, 64-62, and sneaking by Kentucky, 49-45, in the championship game.

Arnie Ferrin, Wat Misaka and Dick Smuin, veterans of the '44 NCAA Championship run, were mainstays of this team, but center Vern Gardner garnered tournament MVP honors. Fred Weidner also played a major part in the championship.

The NIT crown was the last of the three major basketball championships to elude the Utes, making the University of Utah the only school in history to win the NCAA, NIT and AAU National Championships.

The starters from the 1947 NIT title team: Wat Misaka, Fred Weidner, Arnie Ferrin, Vern Gardner and Leon Watson.
