Izzo on Langford...

"I think there was a worry that he may never play basketball again. And I think that is more gone. Josh was always hoping after this year to test his professional options, both overseas, the G-League and the NBA if he would have had a good season. I think those are still his hopes and dreams. We'll talk about any other options he has when the time comes, but for me right now...it's saddens me a little bit, because even though I did not, and I was kind of honest with most of you, I did not think he would be back. That saddens me because the kind of kid he's been. He's just done everything we could ask of him. We think of somebody it's been unfair to. This kid means the world to me and I think to our program for what he stood for. Both religiously, academically, athletically... he was the workhorse of our team. Now, I'm hoping to help him fulfill another dream and goal, and that's where we're kind of at right now. Put it anyway you want it, I'm sure there's some fans out there that think he was popping back in in January and everything was going to be great. That wasn't how I left it. It's way more of a positive than a negative, because I think it's positive that his future in basketball is there and he has a future in basketball, and for that I'm really excited."
