1. What power dynamics are at play in the surrogacy industry?
2. Many women are willing surrogates and are motivated by the economic incentive. How would a crackdown on surrogacy impact their economic livelihood?
3. One prerequisite of becoming a surrogate is having birthed your own biological children first. For many of these women, the health care provided to them as a surrogate is far better than care they received with their own children. What do those two experiences reveal about the inequity between surrogates and their clients?
