

General questions

1. What problems can you identify in this story? Are solutions presented?
2. In what way might this story be relevant in your community?

Further exploration

1. How could the acceptance and employment of those rejected by society change public perception?
2. About a fifth of the workers at the factory are high school dropouts, and if they don't close that gap, they could risk losing their jobs. What do you think about the mandatory educational requirement?
3. The factory offers educational opportunities in addition to employment. Should this model be replicated in other industries and communities? How?