

General questions

1. What problems can you identify in this story? Are solutions presented?
2. In what way might this story be relevant in your community?

Further exploration

1. Is it worth introducing reforming how things are taught when the entire education system is underfunded and rife with corruption?
2. One step taken by the Kiran School was to arrange classes by ability, not by grade level. Is this an approach that should be replicated elsewhere? Are there any potential downsides to that approach?
3. Khatri and others said the education system is at the root of intolerance and most of Pakistan's social and economic problems. How can changing an education system impact a country?