While Lee's army was resting in Virginia after the battle of Gettysburg, there was a gracious revival of religion. Among the ministers who visited us was a Brother Carroll from Texas.

At one of the services I noticed a comrade much impressed. After the meeting, we returned to camp together. As we passed there some words, I said, "Leatherwood, I believe you have reached the crisis of your life. Let's kneel down and talk to God about it." Then placing my hand on his shoulder, I asked God for His Holy Spirit to enlighten his heart & as his atoning sacrifice for sin.

After a few minutes, he threw his arms about me and cried in prayer, "I throw myself beneath the cross, accept pardon for my sins, and promise to serve you, Lord, as long as I live." Addressing me, he added, "Sturgis, I know by this joy in my heart that he has accepted me."

The next day we rushed just miles down the Rappahannock in the heat of the day. Leatherwood, who was in a company ahead of me, fell out of the ranks and sat down. When I came to where he was, I asked, "What is the matter?" "Fogging," he said, "lay me down, Sturgis." It was sunstroke. I took off his knapsack unbuttoned his collar, fanned him with my hat, but in two minutes he was dead.

Licensed to preach by Centon Ridge Baptist Church, Alabama, about five years after the war I was assisting in a series of meetings, and was invited to dine with a sister who introduced her daughter as Mrs. Leatherwood. Conversation disclosed the fact that she was the widow of my comrade. She knew that he had died but she knew nothing of his conversion, and the experience of his last days. When I told her about being tears of joy streamed down her face, and she cried, "Brother Sturgis, nothing in my life has done me so much good as to know that my husband is saved!"
