Critical of religion

The furor over Jerry Falwell must seem sad and ridiculous to the scientific intellectuals of our community.

Because religion has been shown by modern science to be based on fantasy, fear, and perverse ignorance, the protesters who believe in the Big Boogie Man in the Sky, the Omnipotent Daddy who will let us live forever or burn us in Hell, have no cause to protest against Falwell, who is a typical Christian, a typical exploiter of the ignorant masses who still believe in God and the Devil. Recent studies have shown a strong correlation between religion and low social and educational attainment.

Instead of dignifying Falwell by quickie rattles, our community should devote more funds and energy to providing real education for our youth, learning based on scientifically accountable scholars, rather than charlatans who claim that each of us can live forever. Such claims would be laughed out of any legal court in the land for lack of a shred of evidence. They would be subject to standards of false advertising, if the ignorant masses who have not availed themselves of opportunities for real scientific education were not still in control of the sensationalistic media.

Besides preying on the mental weakness of the masses, religion also has been a terrifying tool of patriarchal male-chauvinist domination. It has fostered blind obedience and castrated the minds and hearts of those who have been "spooked" or seduced by its childish claims.

Instead of spending money for newspaper ads denouncing Falwell, concerned citizens should send financial contributions to the many fine educational institutions here that have nurtured the full potency of mental growth through scientific endeavors.

Church & state

I am most interested in the case of A. Frey, whom I do not know, who is a church and state.
