

She is why I give. Ask me why.

World Vision

THE CHALLENGE—

58 million primary-school-age children are not enrolled in school.

Girls and boys often drop out of school because they must work to help support their families or because of harmful socio-cultural norms and practices (such as child marriage). And due to inadequate training of teachers and other factors, millions of young girls and boys around the world can't read or write.

THE OPPORTUNITY—

When students are equipped with literacy and other life skills through education, they can grow into adults who earn higher wages, educate their own children, and have a voice in their own community.

This is what breaking the cycle of poverty through education looks like—

- » Creating teaching and learning materials in local languages
- » Setting up and facilitating of early education centers and after-school clubs
- » Distributing school supplies and books
- » Providing teacher training, reading camps, and resource production
- » Training children and communities to prevent and respond to gender-based violence in schools, and supporting girls to transition to and complete secondary school
- » Training in vital skills to support adolescents in achieving education and life goals
- » Collaborating with leaders and governments to improve the quality of education

YOU CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE

To make lasting change for education with your colleagues, go to worldvision.org/WhyIGive.

EDUCATION